I remember at one time Eton had all manuals online. Now I can't find them either.
However, the FAQ for the YB400 answers lots of stuff related to the operation of the radio.

The Yahoo Group for Grundig Radios probably has a manual in the files section, or has a member who can upload it to the group. You have to join to view files.

So, between the two, if the cost came up for the same used, the R75 is the smarter buy? I always figured that the R71 would be.

Younger kilobuck models, or younger $500 models?
I'd figure that it still had the DX capabilities over the new competition in it's price range, the R75 and Sat 800 (and now E1).

What is the very wide bubbling noise in the 17m ham band?
I've heard it a few times now and I have no clue what it is nor where it originates. I've used some different receivers on DXtuners and it's widely receivable over both north and south america.

Any ideas on this one?
Thanks!

There will be some tech work required if you go that way....caps need to be replaced on the DC-DC and display boards, trimmers on the PLL will probably need to be replaced. And there will be some solder joints that need to be touched up due to the huge heat output of the regulator. And you may need to replace the lithium cell.

Some parts will be hard to come by soon. If you're up to the challenge, R-71 is a higher quality build. If you're not, R-71 can be a bit much.

My preference was with R-71. But that's my preference. I like the feature set, performance is still superior to most of what's out there.

It really depends on what your intentions for the radio are.

Sat 800 and E1 aren't in the same class. Not by far. Because they were not built to the same purpose as R-71. Sat 800 and E1 are entertainment radios, with DX performance -- such that it is -- a bonus. R-71 was created as a high performance communications radio, with DX performance a priority.

As for price class, remember that R-71 was pushing the high side of $1700 by the time it was discontinued. But newer technology has made quantum improvements in performance, often at less cost. So, you're question has no real definitive answer.

Against younger comm receivers, R-71 holds its own, $500 or kilobuck models. Not was well as it used to. But it does well.

Against program listening models, like SAT 800, E1 or even HF-150, R-71 is a more robust performer in many environments, but that can be as much a matter of taste as it is actual numbers. And it is often a matter of environment.

There's not a peep. You'd really think that something that was so imcredibly importany leading up to the war would still be as important today and being discussed in the media or by the government.

For the 50th time, the other reasons would not have sold the public on the

How they vote in the United Nations:

Below are the actual voting records of various Arabic/Islamic States which are recorded in both the US State Department and United Nations records:

Kuwait votes against the United States 67% of the time
Qatar votes against the United States 67% of the time Morocco votes against the United States 70% of the time United Arab Emirates votes against the U. S. 70% of the time.
Jordan votes against the United States 71% of the time.
Tunisia votes against the United States 71% of the time.
Saudi Arabia votes against the United States 73% of the time.
Yemen votes against the United States 74% of the time.
Algeria votes against the United States 74% of the time.
Oman votes against the United States 74% of the time.

India votes against the United States 81% of the time.
Syria votes against the United States 84% of the time.
Mauritania votes against the United States 87% of the time.

U S Foreign Aid to those that hate us:

Egypt, for example, after voting 79% of the time against the United States, still receives $2 billion annually in US Foreign Aid.

Jordan votes 71% against the United States and receives $192,814,000 annually in US Foreign Aid.

Pakistan votes 75% against the United States receives $6,721,000 annually in US Foreign Aid.

India votes 81% against the United States receives $143,699,000 annually.

Perhaps it is time to get out of the UN or change it NOW and give the tax savings back to the American workers who are having to skimp and sacrifice to pay the taxes (and gasoline).

Pass this along to every taxpaying citizen you know. And send to your

Perhaps you don't expect the rest of the world to vote in their own best

How about showing how ALL UN members vote with respect to the US?

If you are not fussy about portable vs tabletop, have a look for a RS DX-394. They are easily modified with lots of space to mount the converter inside. The B model will give the best results on DRM but the A and original models can be modified to match the B's superior stability. And if you are into 'hacking' radios, the DX-394 has more potential and more published mods than any other radio with a big user group. Always one for auction on ebay, frequently in UK. Check these sites for DX-394 mods:

I did watch about two or three minutes of it.The lights in my neigborhood went off at about 8:45 PM (I hate it when that happens) this evening and came back on about fifteen minutes later.I stepped out in my front yard for a couple of minutes with my doggy and I could see the lights across Highway 80 from me were still on.I guess somebody at one of the generating plants in the Jackson area probally pulled a mini "Los Angeles" for my neighborhood.

ROFLMAO!!!! How the once-mighty world-conquering British Empire has been relegated to a pathetic pissant country full of whining liberal cowards who lack the balls to deal with the ongoing muslim invasion of the UK. LOL!

It's really a shame because Brits are great people, they just need to grow some balls again if they intend to go it alone.

I should add that the USA also needs bigger cajones to defeat the muslims. At least we're trying, but we need rachet up the effort quite a bit more.

So? The US votes with Israel almost 100% of the time. When they don't, it's an abstention. The zionists can do no wrong.

I think Kevin was doing the ADV broadcasts and maybe you can catch him on:

Saturday 6:00pm Eastern Time (Saturday 23:00 UTC) - 5.085 and 6.890 MHz via WWRB

Saturday 11:00pm Eastern Time (Sunday 4:00 UTC) 5.085 MHz via WWRB

As far as 313, you're right - it has been quiet lately. I heard NR5T a few weeks ago accusing Kind Jewish Indian of jamming but I could only hear 1 side of the conversation. We need some more good preaching on there from Bro. John.

So who was the Red Panty Man? Anyone know?

OTOH, Powell said that he believed the information he was given about Iraq WMD was bogus.

And I don't consider the amount and type of weapons described at the UN meeting to be easily portable. You are also assumimg that Saddam would willingly give away something that he supposedly treasured. Why wouldn't he unleash a chemical or biological attack on the enemy as they moved closer on Baghdad? He was willing to use them on the Kurds, why not the US?

I'm sorry, but this doesn't add up.

Bull. There's been nothing discreet about what we've done regarding WMD in Iraq. How discreet was the events leading up to the war? If we couldn't discreetly get them in Iraq without a war, what makes you think it'll be any different elsewhere? And are you prepared to wage a second war while troops, equipment and money are scarce? Who would even believe us about WMD after the Iraq debacle? And if they are so portable, then they can be moved again right?

You don't wage wars without the implicit approval of the people. You also don't wage war based on shaky, if outright untrue intelligence. Did anyone ask the hard questions? How reliable is this information? If WMD are easily portable, how do we prevent them from being moved out of the country? Was the public told about the downside of the war? Considering the lack of WMD, the daily bombings and the lack of an exit strategy, the public is getting greatly dissillusioned about the war. And don't be surprised if they don't kick out the ones in power.

Oh yeah, he can start a war with whoever he wants. But the people don't have to sit back and take it either. And it just may result in riots and internal strife. If Bush said he was going to war with Japan tomorrow, he could do it right? He doesn't have to even tell us why. Just go out and do it because he can. How would you feel about it? Would you want to know why? Or would you just say, hey let's go get those Japs! Kill them! Our President doesn't need our permission. He doesn't need to lay out the reasons! Just do it!

Sounds remarkably stupid if you are that gullible.

Check it out~ now at 0700 to 0900

They are saying that the USA is planning to bulldoze the black section of New Orleans, and allow Haliburton to build several gambling casinos there.

Also the city population will now be a big majority for Caucasians. So we will be able to take over the city and put it in the hands of the Chosen ones again.

There will be no reparations said President Bush. No free homes will be built for black people despite the fact that we enslaved them, raped, murdered, and brutalized them for centuries.
They are at the bottom of the totem pole and that's where we are dedicated as a race to keep them.

We have been false to the past, false in the present, and we solemnly bind ourselves as the superior race to be false to the future.

5 ATF agents shot and killed by NO police as they were attempting to breach the levees on September 4th.

These jigaboos are full of conspiracy theories. White folks would never pull stunts like those.

Are there many DRM stations out there? Can one listen to them as if it was a shortwave station? I mean listening to stations located thousands of miles.

I've been reading that there will be many new radio receivers next year DRM capable.

Is there an online list of DRM stations all over the world?

Cheers.

Yes, there are some DRM broadcasts to listen to. I suggest you act fast, though, and if you buy a receiver get one that performs well with ordinary shortwave broadcasts, since that's what you'll be listening to after DRM disappears.

Dude, I think you are confusing your political extremes. Left-wing extremists are usually compared to communists; it's the right-wing extremists that approach fascism. Try to concentrate; most people find it pretty easy to slander those with opposing views.

Try as I might, I can't seem to put a shine on these old sneakers.

Yes, this may be true . . Fuel costs are making basic Shortwave broadcasting expensive; adding fancy new transmitters to the Budget probably isn't in the caards for many..

UNLESS.. people adopt the WBCQ Model of Wind generated electricity for Transmitters . . ..

Jack,

First, you are combining two subjects, their right to vote as they choose, and the whole other issue of foreign aid. (Unless you are implying that by giving them foreign aid, that should allow us to "buy" their vote, but wouldn't that be corruption? ...Oh, never mind.)

As to voting, what is your point?

We are actively trying to spread democracy around the world. Yet, when others exercise their democratic right to vote, you whine because they don't kow-tow to our "party line".

Sorry, but you can't have it both ways. "Democracy" means they vote how they want, not how we want them to vote.

No foolin', Sherlock, you have an intuitive grasp of the obvious, but you missed my point. With democracy (that we are touting around the world), they can "generally be against us", generally be for us or anywhere in between. That's what democracy means. If we are going to push democracy, we better be man enough to accept the outcome, no matter which way it goes (unless you/he are implying that we are trying to buy their vote).

This is interesting,
just about every nation on the list does not value human life as we do, nor do they posses our wealth and freedom.
And the compassion they give there own people is very little as compared to us. Could it be partly that there vote indicates they are envious to the point of resentment?
I think so.
Makes me glad we do not live as one nation under there god. But as one nation under our God.
Another way to put it. It seems by there voting record they are anit-America. But what does it matter. They are just a bunch of miss guided third world countries.
We are the United States of America that has been blessed and made great by Devine Providence.
So we will continue as good stewards to share the blessings love,life and liberty we have received by our creator, with the rest of the world. And host the un.

Saudi Arabia is sked there from 1200-1500 in Arabic.

What you were probably hearing in English was the BBC.

The fabric was covered with Aluminum Paste which a class 3, If you

Powered Aluminum and other kinds of powered metals are often used by movie studios for fire effects in some movies.I once worked at Metal Trims Industries (a Division of Enryco in Ohio) here in Jackson for about a year and a half back in the 1970's untill myself and some other folks got laid off,I went and found me another job after I got laid off,a better job too.The Company,Metal Trims Industries in Jackson went out of business not long after that.I worked in the press department at Metal Trims Industries.There were long round ingots of aluminium and we used a metal cutting bandsaw to cut off whatever length of ingots as were required for whichever paticular die was being used/placed into the press at the time,many,many different dies we used there.There was an electric heater built into the big horizontal press I worked at and a hydraulic ram that pushed the heated up aluminum ingot through the die.The aluminum ingots were extruded/pushed through the die and the shape of the aluminum extrusions depended on whichever part number of the dies we used in the press.It didn't take me long to learn how to use a micrometer and jewelers files to keep the specifications of the dies in proper shape/condition,sometimes I would have to use a ball peen hammer and beat around on the face of the dies and file and file some more untill I got those old worn out dies back into specifications,they were a pain the ass sometimes,it was all part of the job.We always kept a lot of sawdust scattered around on the floor area of the press because sometimes the hot hydraulic fluid from the press would leak on the floor and start a small fire and we used the sawdust to soak up the oil.You couldn't be walking around on that crappy old concrete floor if it had hydraulic fluid on there.I never actually saw any aluminum dust on fire and burning when I worked there.

Doesn't Icom still provide service for the IC-R71A? I thought that was a main difference between Kenwood's R-5000 and the IC-R71A.

Definitely would be for DXing and adjacent channel rejection. I use 5980 Radio Marocaine as a standard point for rejection, as the selectable sideband sync on my Sat 800 has tremendous trouble with bleedover from 5975 BBC. At least one other person said that they have no trouble using their Sat 800's sync to lock in Marocaine easily (without having to constantly tinker with the filters and whatnot), but that's not been my experience. It'll lock for about a minute or two, and then get bleedover, and that's all she wrote.
Going the ECSS route helps a bit, but the Sat 800 simply doesn't have the full toolset or the specs that a real DXing machine has. If a radio can handle that requirement, then I'd be set. As for DXing, hell, any band has it's faint signals; if a radio can dig out more of them, the more the merrier.

Bingo.

True, but I often think of the R71A as a $350-$400 used radio now, not the original price. It's a legacy product nowadays.

Of course, as a measure of how good it was, it outlasted the IC-R72. Which is why I was asking about the R75; was it going to be another R72, or would it really match the R71A in DX-ing performance?

True, but then again, I already have a Sat 800 for program listening (as well as that SX-100, when I get done working on it). The DXing machine is where I've a gap in my shack; and short of spending $800 or so for an R8B, I'd like a good DXing piece of equipment that I can purchase without too much pain in the next year or two.

Here is an article from NASA on the solar minimum.
This page has a movie of the recent big X-class flare.
The article speaks about the space weather effects on radio propagation that we have been experiencing.

The 17 MHz and 21 MHz bands have been very good so far this morning.

You purchased yours while they were still being made; now that they are discontinued the prices are moving up. Saw one recently ~$1200 and I expect to see them go higher than that.

Most of the time it's warm enough here in the wintertime I hardly ever need to turn up the heat.(natural gas heat,one floor furnace in my living room and one floor furnace in the hall,electric stove and electric water heater,I don't even need gas in the warmer months) I doubt if I could afford to live way up North.Been there,done that before,Indiana in 1947,Montana in 1956,Kansas in 1957,Illinois and Missouri in 1963.I nearly froze to death too,it took me a long time to thaw out when I moved back home to Mississippi.The needle on the gas gage in my 1986 Ford Crown Victoria LTD car was was sitting halfway between empty and the one quarter mark a few days ago,I filled up the gas tank for $30.00,that will last me between about two to three months.

Yeah, in the 80's when he was an allie of the US and Reagan looked the other way. But now we are supposed to _care_ about those poor Iraqis. Care about how bad Saddam is. Bullshit. No one cared about the plight of ths Kurds Discreetly without a war was a hypothetical. Reality was it wasn't discreet

So we ran in like a bull, which supposedly caused the WMD to skop town so we have to look elsewhere. Is that it? Why didn't we go discreetly and get them?

Because eventually we have to stop alienating the world by acting like a brute. We used to be the good guys, now we just look like conquerers. We didn't look that way when we weht into Afghanistan, but Iraq was just a stretch by any means and the world saw it for that.

Everyone waved the fucking flag, told of glorious things, and about how we would be greeted by Iraq's throwing flowers at us. Bush should be fucking impeached; at the very least investigated as to what he and his staff knew prior to the war. But it won't happen. Bush even refused to testify under oath at the 9/11 commission. Seems very likely he had something to hide.

But it was ok to ask Clinton under oath about an affair. An affair that was legal. How many times do you get asked about the legal things you do in your life?

It's all true! I verified it all today. Here is a link that you will not find anywhere in the US. I had to go to the BBC to find the actual story.

They have somehow quickly removed the actual story from American servers. You can find links about the story, but when you click on them they talk about something else.

The Great New Orleans Land Grab

The 17th Street Canal levee was breached on purpose

by
R. Limbaugh

Los Angeles, Alta California - September 7, 2005 - (ACN) There were numerous incidents that occurred during and immediately after Katrina struck that point to the "unthinkable".

It now appears that a sophisticated plan was implemented that utilized the "cover of a hurricane" to first destroy and than take over the City of New Orleans?

As the world watched the events unfolding, one could not help think that something was terribly afoot concerning the rescue by FEMA of the city's poor and predominate Black population.

It seems that a well laid out plan was put into effect to grab valuable real estate from well established but poverty stricken Black families of New Orleans? What is being implemented now is nothing less than a sophisticated scheme to purge and ethnically cleanse what Whites have termed "Black and 'welfare bloated' New Orleans".

Among the most telling anomalies pointing to something terribly afoot is the gun battle, killing 5, that occurred at the breached levee between the New Orleans Police Department and, what have now been identified as US military agents.

An Associated Press report, which has now disappeared, stated that at least five USA Defense Department personnel where shot dead by New Orleans police officers in the proximity of the breached levee. (Please Note: The original media reports concerning the shootout are now being changed or "cleansed" in a cover-up. We found one original report at http://www.guardian.co.uk/worldlatest/story/0,1280,-5256023,00.html La Voz de Aztlan has a mirror page of this report at http://www.aztlan.net/police_kill_five_contractors.htm in case this report gets changed or deleted as well)

A spokesman for the Army Corps of Engineers said later that those killed were "federal contractors" on their way to "repair" a canal. The "contractors" were on their way to launch barges into Lake Pontchartrain, in an operation to "fix" the 17th Street Canal, according to the Army Corps of Engineers spokesman. Deputy Police Chief W.J. Riley of New Orleans later reported that his policemen had shot at eight suspicious people near the breached levee, killing five or six.

Who were these "military agents" that were killed by the police near the 17th Street Canal breached levee and what were they doing there? Why did the New Orleans police find it necessary to shoot and kill 5 or 6 of them?

No one is saying anything and it appears that the news story has now been swept under the rug. Were these US Department of Defense personnel a Special Forces group or Navy Seals with top secret orders to sabotaged the levee? There are verifiable reports that at least 100 New Orleans police officers have disappeared from the face of the earth and that two have committed suicide. Could these be policemen that died defending the levee against sabotage by "federal contractors"?

Another telling incident that points to a "nefarious plan" is what New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin said at the height of the crisis. He said publicly, "I fear the CIA may take me out!" Mayor Nagin, a Black, said this twice.

He told a reporter for the Associated Press: "If the CIA slips me something and next week you don't see me, you'll all know what happened." Later he told interviewers for CNN on a live broadcast that he feared the "CIA might take me out." What does Mayor Ray Nagin know and why does he fear the CIA?

In an interview by WWL TV, Mayor Nagin complained vociferously that Louisiana National Guard Blackhawk helicopters were being stopped from dropping sandbags to plug the levee soon after it breached. There is evidence that no repairs were allowed on the levee until after New Orleans was totally flooded!

Many civilian groups who were attempting to aid people trapped in their attics, on their roofs and at the Superdome are reporting that FEMA, other federal agents and the US military essentially "stopped" them from doing so. Convoys that were organized by truckers and carrying "food and water" were blocked by agents of the federal government on the highways and roads leading to New Orleans. The American Red Cross, in addition, encountered numerous incidents and has made formal complaints.

A private ham radio network that deployed throughout the hurricane ravished region reported that the airwaves were being "jammed" making it impossible to communicate emergency information. Churches, hospitals and other essential community groups reported that the first thing that the US military did, when they arrived, was to cut their telephone lines and confiscate communications devices.

We all witnessed news reports and heard statements by flood victims concerning the behavior of the US military. Many Black families complained that military vehicles did not stop to assist them but just drove by. One news report showed military personnel playing cards inside a barrack while Black citizens were dying of thirst and hunger. Today, it is very revealing how the federal government is handling the disaster. They want every Black out of New Orleans and those who insist on staying in their homes will be removed by force. The government, through some media, is utilizing scare tactics to cleanse New Orleans of all Blacks.

They want no witnesses and this will make the "land grab" a lot easier to undertake. One scare tactic is calling the flood water "a horrid toxic soup of feces a rotting flesh of corpses". The military thugs are now getting tough with Black families that have owned their old but beloved homes for many generations.

Mr. Rufus Johnson, a family patriarch who lives in the French Quarter, said in an interview, "The army has given me an ultimatum to leave or suffer the consequences of a forced eviction. I do not understand . My entire family and I survived Katrina and now they want to throw me out of the home we have had for generations". Mr. Johnson lives in a neighborhood where the flood has subsided and his home is not heavily damaged yet FEMA wants him out!

The fact that Vice President Dick Cheney is heavily involved in the FEMA operations from behind the scenes is very troublesome. Cheney and his cronies at Halliburton are in line for the lucrative contracts to "reconstruct a New Orleans".

Deals are already being made with a Las Vegas business group to construct multi-million dollar casinos in the Big Easy on prime real estate that was owned by Black families.

Whites throughout history have been notorious "land grabbers". In the USA they first confiscated land that belonged to American Indians. Most of the Indians ended up in worthless tracts of land called "reservations".

The largest "land grab", however, was the theft of Aztlan. This occurred soon after the Mexican-American War. In Alta California , vast "Ranchos" were stolen from the Californios through a variety of scams.

A favorite ploy was to impose extremely heavy land taxes on the Mexicans and then foreclosing on the properties. The land was then given or sold at very low prices to the Forty Niners who came in large hordes to Alta California during the so called "Gold Rush" of 1849.

The 71A does have some nasty audio, but in SSB mode it's OK, on a decent speaker. I didn't like the FRG-100 I played with much at all, the filters were junk. It was ok other than that. I had an R-5000 for a while, but it got keypad problems and I ended up selling it to a friend after I got it fixed. He still has it today..over 10 years later, and the keypad is totally trashed, but it works fine other than that.

I have had my 515 almost 19 years now, and my original 525 (one of the first made) is owned by a friend now and it was 18 years since I went down to Universal and bought it used, looking like it just came out of the box, for "only" $925.

My 515 needs alignment, bad...

RTTY! Tune up should be dead on 518KHZ I had decent results with the PC decoders, a box like an M6000 from Universal got perfect copy with no audible signal, in the winter months. I just set my NRD515 or 525 to 518.0 and the lights would start flashing and there it went.

Fax?

USB, but you can use LSB, if there is interference. You can just reverse it. I found fax super easy, some friends of mine had problems figuring it out at first. It's too bad almost all the press FAX is gone now, if only the standalone decoders could have come out in the 60's, it would have been so great...

R-71 may be a reasonable choice for you. Although it WILL need attention before long. Bellevue does good work, though. A trip there might be wise to build into the budget if you choose to go that route. They can return it to factory performance. The hourly rate is deceptive. They're so well versed in this radio, with immediate access to parts, that service will be done quickly. In the big picture, it's often cheaper to get factory service than it is from independents offering a lower hourly rate.

Not too long after that,I was at the Post Office at Westland Plaza (a mile and a half East of me,behind doggy's couch) at the intersection at Robinson Road and Ellis Ave.(that post office used to be a McRae's department store,when Metrocenter Mall opened in November of 1977,the store moved to the Mall, www.metromalljackson.com) to buy some stamps and that woman behind the counter pushed some of those U.S.Nazi stamps across the counter to me.I told her,NOPE!!!,I want to buy some American stamps.I bought some American stamps that had little bitty pictures of American antique cars on them.The d..n gaul of that gay Barney Frank,trying to sell me! some Nazi stamps!

Well, let's count the "telling anomalies":

No link given; no such story on BBC web site; poor grammar; ACN? WTF is ACN? And the biggest anomaly? If the government, in collusion with big business, had such a plan to swindle a minority population out of its homes, "R. Limbaugh" would be the last one to expose it.

But this is an interesting piece of fiction.

This morning was pretty interesting on 2 Meters. On 144.260 USB I heard a couple of W2 stations coming in. They were not able to hear me. I wonder if this was some sort of auroral propagation.....the reason I say this is because every so often I would hear a rapid fluttering that would turn into a buzzing sound on their modulation.

million albums already shipped across the globe!

In what is looking to be The Stones' biggest studio album in over a decade, international chart positions for the new album included:

USA No 3
AUSTRALIA No 4

Other charts included No 3 in Japan and No 1 in Holland and Italy.

==========
The band's 'A Bigger Bang Tour' has made a $1 million donation to the American Red Cross Disaster Relief Fund for Hurricane Katrina. In addition, the band is hosting American Red Cross booths at local concert venues throughout the tour.

...you are right. You have described the "classic" characteristics of auroral propagation. For this type of propagation, always point your beam North, no matter where the station is that you are trying to work.
You are using the auroral curtain as a huge reflector. (If you weren't pointing North, that could help explain why you didn't work them).

Lots of solar activity lately...good for VHF, not so good for HF.

North is good, but many times it's better to hunt around for the 'sweet spot' which might be north, north east, north west, etc.

CW is a better mode for aurora contacts than is voice due to the distortion.

Name one person who would speak or think highly on him. His ex Regina?
She's got a VPO on him. His kids? Taken away for suspected sexual abuse and a unhealthy/unclean home environment (according Florida Child

If I were still flying it would be of interest. As Ham equipment it is pricey, but as aircraft equipment it is competitive.

BTW, how come you consider this spam?

I have a Sangean/C.Crane CCRadio, a few years old. The display screen shows only bits and pieces of numbers and letters. Any known, easy fix I could do?

I contacted the C.Crane company, and they want $49.95 just to have their repair guy look at it, plus shipping both ways. Might as well get a new one, as do that -- so, looking for a home fix.

Thanks,

Bob

Thanks for the link. This is an interesting site. I'm reading the story now about Michael Moore and his band of Angels providing relief to the people of New Orleans.

He says the media is not reporting the total truth. Do they ever?

He says bodies are everywhere, and not being picked up.

I said the day the levees breached that there will be at least 25,000 fatalities.

Despite what the locals are now saying, I believe my figure will be found to be more accurate when all is said and done.

I'm still looking for the article about 5 contractors, gov't agents being blasted into infamy by the New Orleans polizia.

Mille grazie muchacho

That is a great point. I had never considered that before. Those buildings were far enough away from each other, that the towers crumbling shouldn't have caused the other buildings to fall.

We have seen powerful tornadoes destroy one building and leave the one next to it standing. There is a lot more destructive energy in a category 3 tornado then there is in a plane striking a building?

One of those things that make you go hummmmmmm

I wonder what the building experts have to say about that?

I jalopize Greg,

The story was found on the Guardian newspaper site; not the BBC as YOU stated. Reading is fundamental Greg.

Hear id D stink 2 de story about the contractors being shot.

The story has pretty much been removed worldwide from the Internet for some reason. I heard it on the evening news that day and did think it was very weird. first they said contractors had been shot . An hour later they said it was looters. Then they went back to contractors, and then there was total silence,

You are assuming that their is only one person in Amerikkka named R. Limbaugh. That is definitely a false notion.

Some of them have a lot higher moral and ethical code than does the one about whom you spoke.

Bad grammar does not in itself, render a person point incorrect. If that were the case, then very little of what President Bush says is true.

If I say the Sun rises in the East and sets in the West worldwide, that is a manifest truth, regardless of my political affiliation, ethnicity, or religion.

If I sey de son wises in d east an sits in de west, dat is also troo. It just takes a little more time trying to figure out what the person means.

?Our government is full of extremely articulate Caucasians who lie about just about everything under the sun. If you use grammar as an indication of whether you trust someone or not, you may find yourself in fatal difficulty one day.

As slamem and lickum!

www.devilfinder.com What the Building experts say about the World Trade Center

www.rense.com has some links too,scroll down the middle isle at rense.com There is lots of information all over the internet about why the WTC buildings fell down.Some of the building experts were hushed up,some or at least one of them,that guy in New Mexico,was "forced" to retract his opinion.I never trust govenment.Firemen and Police and average citizens in New York City said they heard explosions in the two tallest WTC buildings.If I was sitting in the Long Branch Saloon,I would never turn my back on those lieing cheating crooked politicians.

didn't read the link so this may be OT. Bottom line is I have hear several sources that think the hydrogen would flash burn much faster than the Hindenburg film shows. Aluminum works as an accelerator but needs a lot of heat to start. It may well be that it would not start in a hydraulic fluid and sawdust fire but would start with a hydrogen flame as the originating source. Look up thermite and how to make it if you want interesting examples of burning things we don't think will burn. Check with Vietnam era miltary about aluminum tank armor that burned very well once set off.

That Sangean CCRadio is just like the one I bought about eight years ago from ccrane.It did NOT pick up any radio stations any better than my other old radios.I tried it out for one week and I sent thay wayyyyyy over priced piece of plastic JUNK back.Then I bought a Sangean ATS 909 Shortwave radio and I tried it for a week too.HUMP!,that radio didn't show me dip s..t!,I sent that wayyyyyy over priced piece of plastic JUNK back too.How does ccrane get away with it,RIPPING so many people OFF (post a complaint about ccrane and Sangean at www.ripoffreport.com) like that all the time? And those two Kooks,Art Bell and George Noory are still touting that RIPP OFF artist ccrane company and those RIPP OFF Sangean radios.Buy a Sangean radio from crane and expect to send it back to ccrane in a year or two for digital front panel repair/replacement and be prepared to pay at least about $50.00 plus shipping and handling charges too,,,, What A RIPP OFF! I wonder if Art Bell and George Noory are getting any kickbacks from ccrane repairing those Sangean radios?

YES~they are completely clueless.
They technological illiterates.
(for example: Just look at the lack of technical experience of former FCC commisioner Powell and current commisioner Abernathy.)

>>Don't they have engineers that they can talk to?

<major snip>

There are engineers, and other comms folks that they can talk to.
Unfortunately, the higher command political types DON"T talk to them.
They view commo types as techno-GEEKS and idiots because comm folks don't schmooze or BS and don't have political skills.

The eyes of higher command political types glaze over, and their minds go blank, when you start to talking about mission critical components, fault tolerance, system robustness,and critical path analysis.

Comms structures tend to be up high and outside in areas that are cheap to acquire.
Cheap usually boils down to areas that nobody else wants.
Consequently Mission Critical Towers, antennas, radio transmitters, and relay equipment tends to be put in areas that are the first to be damaged in severe weather and are hard to access even under good conditions.

Cheap also means that a of maintenace is "deferred", and a full set of back-up or even critical repair parts and equipment is not acquired, much less stored and assembled in a ready to go condition.

>>They're talking about needing more spectrum for comms. Under those >>conditions, no amount of additional spectrum space would make a whit of Communications spectrum is really not the problem.

Lack of Bandwidth on the few remaining operational comm systems is the real problem.
In an emergency there is a greatly increased amount of data trying to go through the few, much reduced, remaining comm systems

THAT"S RIGHT, but you can have equipment stockpiled and trained installers/operators ready to go.

No jalopy necessary!

My point about the grammar was that most news stories are well edited for grammar as well as content. But you are right, bad grammar doesn't negate the facts.

More than one R. Limbaugh? That's really scary.

I was looking for a link to the entire story you posted.

I'll maintain my skepticism, no offense intended.

The drift problem seems to have been fixed, at least it's no longer a problem on my S350DL. It's also very sensitive off the whip antenna.
The S350DL is now my portable radio of choice, beating out the YB400, Sony 7600G and ATS909, all of which I own.

I remember when there was almost never any mispelling or typos or leaving a word out of sentences in newspapers,magazines,science and technology journals.Nowdays,it is almost everyday we see stuff like that.Schools and Colleges used to actually teach,nowdays they are only babysitting. www.devilfinder.com The Deliberate Dumbing Down of America by Charlotte Thompson Iserbyt

Sometimes I make a typo or leave a word (there are no such things as words,words are chopped up pieces of sentences) out,but that is because I sometimes get in too much of a hurry and I don't proof read my post before I hit the Send key.I don't need a stupid spell checker,I learned how to spell when I went to school from 1946 to 1958.

How does the new, improved 350 DL compare to the original 350 version as far as sensitivity... i.e. are they the same in that regard?

What about the selectivity of the 350 DL compared to the 350?

I have the Tecsun version of the 350... a BCL2000. I love it for MW, but rarely use it for SW due to less than stellar selectivity. Mine is one of the last Tecsun models with English lettering and I don't have much of a problem with drift. So I'm wondering if upgrading is worth it, just to have no drift... or are sensitivity and selectivity improved enough to make the switch?

Thanks for any feedback.

ALL you need to know is that the implementation was screwed up and over hyped.

OH YEAH and it was lied about a lot buy the DRM organization.

AND it takes up more bandwidth than it was supposed too.

BUT it is just another system than the current analog with its mixed bag of pluses and minuses, which make it no better than the current analog system so why change to it?

Well, my CCRadio display went bad after the warranty ran out.

In one of the other groups, someone said to just go in and clean the panel layers and electrical contacts etcetera with isop. alcohol -- I may try that.

You'd think, with the panels apparantly going consistently bad, they would come up with some other readout -- oh, well...

I cannot answer that question, I have never used the S350. The following article suggests that it is not worth upgrading at this time.

I went to the wal mart foodstore department this afternoon and then I did go to the Radio Shack store in the strip mall next to the wal mart store.They were out of stock on the Grundig S350 radios.The sales lady said the Clinton (Clinton is a city five miles West of me) store has two Grundig S350 DL radios for nintey nine dollars each.(She did say Grundig S350 DL radios) Since I am not interested in buying one of those radios,I am not going to waste my time driving over there to see for myself.If I want to buy a new radio of a price range between about $100.00 and $150.00 I will pick up my phone and call www.jr.com and buy a new Sony GR 7600 radio.

I drove across it once back in September of 1999 from Slidell to Metaire.

It is an absolutely incredible bridge. About 23 miles long. There are a few miles where it is difficult to see land regardless of which way you look. It is just like driving out into the middle of the ocean.

I would not want to be the first few thousand people to drive across it tomorrow. I think I would wait a month or so to make sure it is stable,

From the damage done to the I-10 East bridge, there must be something wrong with the causeway bridge that they haven't found yet.

Back in the 1970's,U.S.cops started training Military style as regards shooting and killing and breaking things.I used to subscribe to Soldier Of Fortune and American Survival magazines and one of those magazines which dates back to the 1970's had an article about U.S.cops training Military style.In the 1980's,After Watts (Los Angeles area) happened and those criminals in Los Angeles who had all that bulletproof garb on themselves and they were walking down the street shooting and they had the cops out gunned,that is when the cops all over America REALLY started getting TOUGH.Back in the 1980's,I gave all of those magazines to one of my old buddy's sons.His son is a Chief Flight Loader on the C-17 Aircraft in the Mississippi Air National Guard.You don't want to mess with the cops and you especially don't want to mess with the SWAT cops.However,just like a lot of other things in life,there are some crooked cops out there too,all over the World.Most cops are OK though.

I been knowing about it for nearly two weeks or more already via the internet.That Cuban woman is a day late (at least a couple of weeks late) and a dollar short.Check out the Flaming Skull emblazoned garb of the New Orleans S.W.A.T.team picture www.rense.com (it could be a Photo shop picture,I don't know) Next thing we know,that Cuban woman will be saying Mexicans and Nederlands people are on the Mississippi Gulf Coast (which is true) and some people from Puerto Rico are or were patroling New Orleans.(which is also true) looking for dead bodies.

The Lake Pontchartrain Causeway Bridge has some post/poles with emergency phones on the post/poles (just like many Bridges in America have) on the North and South lanes about every mile in case your vehicle breaks down and you need to call for assistance.I wouldn't have any qualms at all about driving across the Bridge.The kind of Bridges that scare me are them very high Bridges wayyyyy up there.Look in a New Orleans phone book and you will see a few listings for auto help/repair places you can call in case your vehicle breaks down anywhere in the greater New Orleans metro area.They will come out and get your vehicle going (even if you only need a few gallons of gas) for you and they don't rip you off either.

That old Huey P.Long Bridge was something else! So was the old Bridge from Vicksburg,Mississippi to Louisiana. (about forty five miles West of me) Sometimes you almost had to scrape the paint off of your vehicle getting over far enough for them big trucks to get by.

In the 1980s, the United States supported Iraq in its war with Iran.

One reason Saddam Hussein invaded Kuwait was that the American Ambassador to Iraq, April Glaspie, told him that the US would have no objections.

Reagan and Bush I apparently did not care about the gassing of the Kurds until Bush I wanted one more reason to demonize his former ally.

It's not aircraft equipment, it's a single-band ham transceiver that can receive aircraft. There are cheaper multi-band ham transceivers that have wider receivers than that. My VX-5, for example, can receive aircraft - AND any frequency from 0.5 MHz to 999 MHz, AM, FM or WFM, and can transmit on 6, 2 and 440. And it's cheaper.

From what I see on their web page, it appears that the VXA-700 is an airband transceiver (not just a receiver), with 2-meter amateur operation added.

It does look as if it re-uses a lot of the VX-7 construction.

Scrap pieces of aluminum,we would throw them up on a big pile by the stretcher.The stretcher was a metal "claw" that gripped one end of the aluminum extrusions and another "claw" that gripped the other end of the aluminum extrusions,one single aluminum extrusion at a time.The "claws" were operated by compressed air.We would put an extrusion in the stretcher and operate the compressed air lever and give the aluminum extrusions a real hard yank to get the aluminum extrusions straight.Then we would put the straightened extrusions on a big metal cart thingy and roll the big cart full of aluminum extrusions into a big oven (an oven as big as a single car garage) and the heat from the oven hardened the aluminum extrusions.We had a device with a point on the device and we had to test the aluminum extrusions to a certain Rockwell hardness standard pertaining to the aluminum extrusions.(Mr.Stovall once said,Where are you going with my blade {{blade,, a big flat piece of aluminum}} Stovall said,go ahead on with it) Wet aluminum scrap pieces on that big pile of aluminum scrap pile stuck (in rainy weather because that part of the side of the building was screened in and rain would blow in there) to each other almost like glue.

Ha. That's probably a good way of putting it.
So the IC-R75 is a viable option, so long as you don't think that the sync is going to solve your problems.

Yes, I will have to spend some time on my antenna end of things shortly. Next spring, I'm going to be planting a swamp white oak near our deck to get some long term shade. The problem is that where the tree will go is directly underneath the 50' random wire I have strung out in the backyard, so I know that my current antenna is doomed.
I suppose I might look into a Wellbrook or homebrewing my own loop so that I can work in a slightly more confined configuration (at least until the trees mature and I can use them for supports).

Thanks for the info, Peter. Good as always. I figure I can live with the audio, since I used to have an IC-R70 before I bought the Sat 800. I know, however, that the IC-R71A had DXing advantages and fewer idiocyncracies than the R70 had. I got rid of the R70 more due to the idiocyncracies surrounding the ergonomics more than the performance itself, although I didn't see the need at the time to hang onto more than one working tabletop or portatop at one time, either. (Silly me.)

Now if Kenwood were as good at helping out with the R-5000, I'd probably have them first on my list...

Like most flu viruses, this form started in wild birds such as geese, ducks and swans in Asia.

"They die of a pneumonia, just like people," says William Karesh, the lead veterinarian for the Wildlife Conservation Society. "When you open them up, you do a post-mortem exam.
Their lungs are just full of fluid and full of blood."

Karesh has been tracking this flu strain for the last several years as it has gained strength, spreading from wild birds to chickens to humans.
"We start at a market somewhere in Guangdong Province in China," explains Karesh. "And it's packed with cages, and you'll have chickens, and you'll have ducks. You might have some other animals cats, dogs, turtles, snakes and they're all stacked up in cages, and they're all spreading their germs to each other."

The problems with the R-75 sync are based on early users who didn't know how to apply it. It's not like the Drake. It's a bit fiddly. Follow the instructions in the manual, it works fine.

Silly indeed. Actually, R-71 audio can be made more tolerable with a decent speaker.

When I bought my R-71, I did a side by side with R-5000. Picked the R-71 for it's ergonomics, and more substantial build.

For the most part, in the dark, they're the same radio.

No, it is the frothings of conservatives pointing out what a bad guy Saddam is and how great it is that we captured him. These same conservatives din't

Why is it that after the fact we now come clean and say that the fats aren't hey being investigated? Sounds like a convenient coverup to me.

What's so suicidal? They are miltary and it's wartime. Are you saying that it never crossed their mind that in their profession they might get killed?
So they decide not to attack the enemy? Just sit around waiting for the end? Would you ecpect any miltary person not to try and fight during wartime? If they had NBC they would certainly have a good weapon, better than some bombs. Are NBC type weapons that ineffective?

Uhm, I doubt it. We went there to liberate the Iraqis. It would be kind of dumb to nuke their country, leaving it a wasteland, and then expecting them to greet us with smiles and flowers.

Want to try again?

You seem awfully naive. Rumsfeld is their boss and he's already known to want a smaller military to do more with less men. Remember the controversy during the invasion of supply lines stretched thin, not enough soldiers to do the job, people questioning Rumsfelds' wisdom? Remember Generals being displeased that they had to work with less? Recall the much greater number of soldiers that went to liberate Kuwait versus the relatively measly number sent to invade all of Iraq?

We got Rumsfeld's war. And his troop level.

Rumsfeld has

The

That's because they keep changing the enlistment requirements. Recalling soldiers that thought they had done their time. Keeping soldiers there much longer than usual.

You're mistaken. Daily attacks undermine the interim government, cast doubt among the citizens and may lead to civil war.

Yep, so desperate like Bin Laden who attacked the citizens of the US because he was so desperate.

If everything is going so great then we must be nearing the end of our stay that when I see it.

Did we or didn't we have a need for armored vehicles? If we did, then why

I listened to what the soldiers had to say about it. I also know that they had trouble with the rifle lubricant, and some actually requested that better stuff be sent froom home.

Or you could have not lowered taxes. Even now with Katrina Bush refuses to raise taxes. So let's keep borrowing because that's all we know how to do. Everyone is borrowing, getting home equity loans, interest only loans, and running up credit cards. Like country, like citizen. No one will be happy until China has enough of our debt to outright buy us, instead of taking us by war. Stupid conngress, President and people.

Becaus there have been no active labs or plants found, nothing that had appeared active for a long time, and none of the scientists or miltary have said there was one. What eveidence, other than failed intelligence, old intelligence, or intelligence that could only be seen from outside the country but not verified from the inside, was there?

Is it that they all saw the same intel as Bush, or did Bush have other intel that wasn't shown to the Senators? Powell certainly says he believes there was information being held back by the CIA that he would have liked to know.
It's easy for Bush to have the juicy stuff being shown, but not show the parts htta cast doubt on it.

Considering the amount of time and the scope of the report, they have done a good job. But if information was held back for some reason it's not necessarily their fault.

I see. If you don't believe in a war you can only be a peacenick or a coede pink, whatever that is. There are more and more people that are losing faith in the President and the war everyday. Are you telling me the peacenicks are growing that much bigger all the time? No. The regular joes are using their minds for a change and realizing that it's been a failure and possibly a lie. But go on believeing that only certain types can not believe in a war. I believe in the Afghanistan war, but I don't believe in the Iraq war. Afghanistan was certainly justified. Iraq hasn't.

I took a look at the online manual, and there's a lack of description in the manual for the sync, which surprised me. Unless I was looking in the wrong place, that is; I just checked again to make sure, and the only thing as far as setting is concerned is the configuration whether the S-AM gets turned on automatically at low signal levels or whether it's always on.

Yeah; I built one for the R70, which improved things a bit. I should still have it lying around somewhere after we moved to our current house.

Are the better filters on the R71A worth it, like they were/are for the R-5000?

> For the most part, in the dark, they're the same radio.

They were the 1-2 punch in the late 80's, if you couldn't spring for a JRC. The FRG-8800 always seemed to be a step behind the R71A and R-5000, and when the 535D and R8 hit the scene, the 8800 was simply outclassed.

Yeah...
I can buy a brand new Casio watch for $29 too.
However, a Casio watch is not a Sony 7600 and a Sony 7600 is not a DX-398.

I bought a wristwatch (they had a little wagon load of different kinds of wristwatches marked down to $5.00 each) at the wal mart store.It has four little buttons on it with four little pictures of four different breeds of dogs on it.Push the buttons and the wristwatch barks like a dog.

I bought a new Icom 703 a while back for $390. What a great deal! You can talk on it too with the right license or just use it to listen to. It's also remote mountable. You can buy the 708 and it will pick up some UHF and VHF but it's a lot more money and I have something a lot better for the higher frequencies. I guess I could use my Yaesu VX-5 and an appropriate antenna if I wanted something really tiny. Better yet how about a Sony SW100? I've been wanting one for a while now but just can't seem to justify the expense. That AOR-8000 is a nice radio...maybe, just maybe almost as good as my Radio Shack PRO-39 and PRO-95 ;) ;)

Yeah, it seems unlikely, but it's not very often sombody throws 500 kW into the 25 Mhz band, so it's worth a shot. I suppose they might be doing non-Prophet tests at that frequency and power at other times and dates.

Why change? Because:

"DRM can be used for a range of audio content, including multi-lingual speech and music."

http://drm.org/system/technicalaspect.php

Just try that with some old-fashioned analog system.

"There is a global trend towards the adoption of digital technology in radio and communications, especially for distribution and transmission. "

And:

"However, the limited fidelity of existing AM services is causinglisteners to search for other alternatives."

http://drm.org/system/whydigital.php

Well, I'm confused on this point. Didn't AM became obselete in the forties with the introduction of FM? If I remember my history correctly, didn't all the limited fidelity AM stations go bankrupt as all their listeners were drawn to high fidelity FM?

It seems limited fidelity AM is in for it again:

"DRM is the only universal, non-proprietary digital AM radio system with near-FM quality sound available to markets worldwide."

There ya have it. DRM has both "near-FM quality sound" and digital trendiness.

I can't think of any better reasons for the listener to care.

The better ones are ICF2010, SW55, and RFB65. But I recently dusted off my ancient trusty ICF4900 and it disgraced them all on SW sensitivity with only its puny antenna, as does the SW22

Tuned front ends can't be beat. The manual scan is a must Aren't you mixing up DRM with IBOC-AM?

DRM might bring people back to LW/MW/SW and they might not even know it.

One of the things with DRM (and especially with the DAB/DRM chipset now available) is that the user will just be presented with a list of stations and he will just have to pick the one from the list. She will not know if she is listening to a DAB broadcast at 1.4 Ghz or long-wave at below 200 Khz.

DRM has two major advantages:
- it does away with fading, which is one of the things people find most annoying about LW/MW/SW.
The "audio-quality" aspect is a bit mood as it all depends on what mode you are using and I think for most people is not the most important element. But if you produce a stable signal without fading, this would make LW/MW/SW broadcasts quite acceptable by most people.

(The term "near-FM" is marketing talk, just ignore it).

- It allows broadcasters to break into certain markets by broadcasting from abroad. BCE (RTL's broadcasting arm) plan to use it to broadcast using DRM on LW, MW and SW towards different countries.

The new frequencies on LW and MW they have requested at the ITU are 279 Khz (Junglinster towards Germany), 567 Khz (Clervoux towards the Netherlands), 783 Khz (Beidweiler towards France) and 1098 Khz (Clervoux towards Belgium).

For SW, they have asked the HFCC for coordination for two frequencies: 5990 and 6095 Khz.

However, his "broadcasting" days are about to come to a close -- owing to the FCC "red light rule" discussed in other threads, the setting aside of his renewal application is going to put him off the air at the expiration of his present license. If he continues transmitting after that date, he'll start racking up more fines for unlicensed

DRM cannot do away with fading. I have no doubt that a DRM listener won't notice minor fading, but major fading will cause drop-outs, rather than fade outs. I think most listeners would find drop-outs more jarring than fade outs. Either way, it will still be an annoyance.

Every once in a while, there just is no SW signal progagation at all. DRM signals won't get through any better on those no signal times than analog signals do.

LW and MW analog broadcasts are usually quite acceptable within their ground wave coverage area. Skywave progagation is sometimes a problem. DRM may, or may not, reduce those problems.

People will know a particular radio station is on SW whenever it drops out or just never shows up. Or they will blame the radio station. Or their DRM radio.

I really don't think SW radio will ever achieve mainstream popularity, whatever modulation scheme is used.

Why do the DRM proponents make such a big issue of "near-FM" audio? Is that really one of thier best arguements for DRM?

I suppose there might be signal to noise advantages in fringe ground wave areas on LW and MW. There would be economic advantages if they can get the same signal to noise ratio at reduced power. Reducing power on LW and MW should reduce interference areas where the radio landscape is crowded. So, DRM might have some advantages on LW and MW in such places as Europe.

I still don't see any strong advantages on SW, which will always have uneven propagation.

True, but -as you indicate- as long as the C/N ratio is good enough and the FEC knows how to handle the error, the listener will not notice anything.
In that way, it is like FM that is has a much more steep threshold where the signal remains constant for the listener.

In the future, digital techniques will deal with this.

Look at how the US satellite radio-systems deal with this. There is no indication that you only need to have a single source.

Quite a lot of shortwave station broadcast at more then one frequency at a time so it possible to have a radio tuned to two frequencies at the same time and let the radio "interleave" the signals from two sources when one of the has a drop-out.

(DRM includes "alternative frequency" information, so the receiver is able to find out these additional signals by itself).

The choice is upto the broadcaster if he wants to pay for the additional cost of this. (It will probably be that this is only needed during certain times of the day).

There was an additonal mode added to DRM designed to handle the propagation of NVIS; which are worse than the "normal" propagation-problems.

We will see. If DRM works well for most of the time and additional stations have interesting content, people will get one of these "RTL-radios" (which will happen to be a DRM-radio and which happens to work on shortwave-frequencies).

>>(The term "near-FM" is marketing talk, just ignore it).

> Why do the DRM proponents make such a big issue of "near-FM" audio? Is that Beats me. Because it is the argument what most "normal" people understand best. "It does away with fading" is something most people do not understand as most of them do not listen to SW anymore anyway.

>>- It allows broadcasters to break into certain markets by broadcasting

For RTL, the reason is pretty simple. They see that people are moving away from MW and LW to FM just because FM sounds that much better.
But getting a FM-licence for just a new radio-station is not that simple. (you are dependent of the policy of every country involved).

In additonal, in some regions (like for their German market) it allows them to cover a large part of the country with one single radio-station from abroad which is impossible as the media is organised on the level of the "Lander" and not on federal level in Germany.

DRM allows them to start up new stations without them being subject to the legislation of all these individual countries and if DRM provides them with "FM-like" quality (whatever that might be), that will probably be good enough to keep people tuned to their stations and not move to FM-stations.

> I still don't see any strong advantages on SW, which will always have uneven

We will see, but as DMR is a digital broadcasting-system, you can expect additional improvements in the receivers too.

I'd thoroughly recommend any of the Roberts range. I have a Roberts R862 (recently replaced by the R9962) which I use when in the garden; battery life is superb on 2 AA batteries, size is 14x8x3cm (5.5x3x1")
- somewhere between a packet of cigarettes and a small paperback book.
It covers 60m-13m (4-21MHz) split into 9 bands, plus FM-VHF, AM-MW and AM-LW.

It just screams quality. You just have to hold it in your hand, tiny as it is, and play with the tuning knob.

Sensitivity is stunningly excellent when combined with a crocodile-clip random wire. It's not got a lot of controls (band selection, tuning, volume, a dual-mono headphone socket and - er, that's it), but what it lacks in buttons it makes up for in ability to bring in a signal.

I've had a number of cheap/small multiband pocket analogue shortwave radios before, none of them get anywhere close to what this can pull in and none of them are as well built. It does lack a gain control and don't get me wrong, I have other larger SW radios I use for serious DXing (including my ageing Sangean ATS-808a), but for the portability I'm not complaining. It's something I can easily shove into my hand luggage without worrying about ruggedness or battery life.

All Roberts shortwave radios:
http://www.robertsradio.co.uk/worldband.htm

Manual for R9962 (almost identical to my R862):
http://www.robertsradio.co.uk/downloads/guides/r9962ib.pdf
(you really don't need a manual on something this simple, mind)

Roberts radios are usually BBC World Service or BBC Radio 4/5 branded, and often come with a plastic case and a BBC World Service frequency chart.

Come to think of it. Why use different frequencies? DRM is able to handle SFNs (single frequency networks)!

If you would broadcast your signal from (say) two or three different transmittor-sites, if fading causes one of the signals to drop away, the signal from the other site(s) will continue to be received.

It would be interesting to see how much power you would need from these three transmittors together compaired to how much is needed if you only use a single transmittor.

In the VHF-range, single-frequency networks allow for lower transmission-power.
(due to the fact that the radio-signal is broadcast from multiple points, a receiver will receive radio-signals from different directions so there is more change of a signal coming in with a good quality).

It would be interesting to know if the same thing applies for HF!

Cheerio! Kr. BBonne.

Yes, yes yes. From my experience of analogue to digital terrestrial television (DTT) here in the UK:

* What the marketting bods in major cities think is "acceptable"

and

* What country folk like myself are prepared to watch/listen to, in order to get more choice

I'd quite happily listen to fading AM-SW and drop-out DTT if that means I get more choice of the stuff I want (in my case, international news).

But I'd be a lot happier if the marketting people sold this on choice and ease-of-use rather than perfection of audio quality.

If I want to listen to music, I'll put on my MP3 player. I don't want music on the radio, and even if I did, I sincerely doubt I'd find a station playing exactly what I like (which is German techno, of which I have plenty on my MP3 player). With the prevalence of MP3 players these days, I really cannot imagine why anyone would want to listen to the radio for music.

So the radio just has to be good enough quality to hear speech.

I even download comedy/drama to my MP3 player. My radio really is just for news. And it so happens that I can get lots of news from lots of international viewpoints using shortwave, all in acceptable enough quality to hear what they're saying.

Of course with broadband everywhere in the UK, even in rural areas, the whole city/country divide has almost gone. If I'm in my house or my shed, I can listen to anything I like as streamed audio over the Internet. But the reason I like radio is because it follows me everywhere; and I can't (affordably, yet) stream network audio from my car or whilst going for a country walk or whichever cheap & cheerful hotel/cottage I'm having a business/vacation trip to.

Now if I could listen to international news from lots of different viewpoints without having to hook up a ten-metre random wire antenna, THEN I'd be interested. Does DRM do that?

If/when MAN goes OTA, you MAN haters will have nothing left to obsess over in your pointless lives, at least until you find a new target to fill the void in your empty existence.

Oh, now, that's interesting. I got my instructions from the Icom Rep at a hamfest. I may still have them around here somewhere. I wasn't aware there was so little in the manual. But Icom manuals are like that.
I've discovered half a dozen functions on my R10 that aren't in the manual, either. Only acknowledged by Icom in supplements released through limited channels.

If it's MW you're primarily interested in, you may consider a shielded ferrite loop, like the Justice antenna (which can be mounted outdoors and elevated for noise avoidance), or, if you can find one, a McKay -Dymek DA-5. Amazing how quiet reception can be with the McKay. Even indoors.

When I was living downtown, there was no way to get a reliable AM signal in my building. Even on the 52nd floor, WGN was often buried in the noise and WLS wasn't even on the dial. I bought a Select-A-Tennna. It takes some careful tuning, but that cleaned up my AM dial in short order, not only boosting signal, but reducing noise as well.

It doesn't work that dramatically with every receiver, but in this case, it was quite the find.

KIWA offers an audio upgrade kit for R-71. Craig will install it for you for a fee, as well. And even installed, it's not very expensive.
That's actually a mixed blessing. The audio problems with R-71 and it's stablemates is not related to poor design of the audio stage. In fact, as was pointed out in this forum a couple of years ago, the audio stage of R-71 is actually surprisingly clean for a comm radio and quite robust.

Most of the distortion comes from the mixing and detector stages. And for that, there's little remedy. Doing an audio upgrade merely swaps out the ceramic caps in the audio path, which are notoriously poor for audio, replacing them with higher grade, audio friendly caps, which does make for a cleaner audio path. But that, in turn, makes the distortions more distinct and well defined. The audio goes from 'woolly' to harsh.
Noticeable particularly on consonants. In the case of R-71, ceramic caps in the audio path actually work to your benefit, by smearing the harsher elements of the audio across a comparatively wide time interval,---still very small, actually---softening the more irritating elements.

Absolutely. I installed the FL-44 premium filter for SSB. Made a huge difference in rejection on crowded bands. ICOM filters are going to be hard to come by, but InRad makes crystal filters for it, that have received considerable praise. Cost effective, and higher performance than most factory and aftermarket filters. Too.

You may benefit from a factory alignment after you install them, though.

You probably know that R-71 originally released with PBT. And a heated patent infringement battle got that removed. But what's not widely known, is that removal only consisted of removal of the PBT components. The map on the board is still there. And the service manual still has the PBT section depicted, in detail, on it's schematics. So, with a little time inside, and nominal cost, you can restore PBT to a non PBT R-71. You'll want to install a premium filter for this at the same time.

If you ask real nice, Bellevue may actually still have a PBT faceplate for this radio.

R-71 was sold by the thousands for monitoring stations worldwide. Most of the big broadcasters used them. Many government agencies used them. Some may have seen limited military service by accounts I've heard. It was the 'it' radio, to be sure. More trouble free than the JRC's. And more robust in heavy service applications than most anything out there.

What he says is true,
In the US the government regulates this for the reason we have here.
In the US you will not see a chicken farm with a pig farm, or ducks with cows.
Because this is how a virus spreads through fowl to animal to human.
And yes almost all of these flu epidemic come from Asian countries.
They are so poor and there government does not value life as we do.
They are just not motivated to care for the peasants. (red squrare,tanks,

That's diversity reception. Diversity reception is almost as old as SW radio, but it never has been popular with the public. I can imagine diversity reception would be easier to do digitially, but diversity reception doesn't always help. There will be moments in which propagation will be bad on all frequencies, and longer times, such as during solar flare events, in which SW will be useless.

SW radio works well most of the time, at least in the target areas. Let's say a target area gets good reception 95% of the time. How much more reliable might the reception be with DRM? 98%? 99%? Will 99% reliable reception be good enough for non-hobbyists? I really don't think so.

True. Normal people don't have a strong interest in high fidelity radio. They consider thier radios to be appliances. And they want their radios to work as easily and reliably as their refrigerators and stoves. They don't want to hear anything about the ionosphere, interference from halfway around the world, weird propagation and solar flares.

Won't the European Union standardize some of these bureaucratic problems?

Is there really much advantage to having one transmitter covering a huge area? In the US, stations are individualized to the extent that they usually carry the news, traffic and weather for their local market.

The performance of analog radios could have been improved, if people wanted to pay for the improvements. The real improvements in analog radios over the last few years has been in price.

It's worth remembering all the commercial SW data and phone links which were in use before the satellite era. They had diversity reception, sophisticated (for the time) digital modes, high power transmitters, high gain antennas, etc. Yet they abandoned their large investment in SW as satellites became available. Even with all their technology, SW still wasn't reliable enough.

I think the average person expects at least the same order of reliablity from their radios.

One thing is certain, and that is if one is a radio hobbyist DRM is not your friend. DRM = QRM.

Bearing that in mind, anyone who touts DRM is not your friend. They are your enemy.

4195. Problem of nearby transmitter breakthrough

Sorry for the crossposting, but I'm looking for more expertise than I have. I usually hang out in the aviation groups, but am an engineer by training. I have a radio problem:

I have just completed a special rig for our local airport, but it has a problem. I took a rather old but serviceable Sony digital air band receiver (Air 8), boxed it up in a waterproof enclosure and piped the audio out to an FM microwatt transmitter. The idea of this is that visitors to our airport who like to sit in the parking lot and watch the airplanes can listen on their car radios on FM 88.1 to the radio traffic on our Common Traffic Advisory Frequency (CTAF), which at our airport is 123.00 MHz (AM). Unfortunately, while this setup worked perfectly at home well away from the airport, we have an Automatic Weather Observation Station (AWOS) transmitting continuously on 120.60 MHz only 50-60 feet from the place I need to site the receiver. Even though this is only a 5 Watt transmitter, it overloads the front end of the receiver. As soon as anyone keys on 123.00 and the automatic squelch is triggered, all you hear is the AWOS recording.

I've tried quick fix by attenuating the input signal by trimming (shortening) the antenna, but this doesn't really help. This was supposed to be a quick and dirty (gratis) job for the airport, and I've already spent more time and money on it than I wanted to. Any suggestions as to how I might fix this problem? Cheaply? Obviously a better receiver would work (my Yaesu aviation handheld works perfectly at the same location), but I have no other (free) receivers handy. I can move the receiver another 50 feet down the fence, which is my next option, but what if this doesn't work? I can't get it any farther away for several reasons. Anyone have a 120 MHz preselector they can give me? Any really steep (and cheap) 120.6 notch filter designs?

Thanks for any help you can offer.

Are you absolutely sure the offending signal is coming in via the antenna? Is it there if you disconnect the antenna or replace it with a dummy load (termination)? That strongly influences what you need to do to fix it.

Put a tee connector on the receive line coax a length of coax on it with a short at the far end. It must be cut to be exactly 1/4 wavelength (including connector spur.) This will appear t be an open circuit at the resonant frequency, but will severely attenuate your nearby unwanted signal.

Failing that, a series LC network across the receive line will do a similar task. Try a 47pf trimmer cap in series with a coil made from 4 to 6 turns around a bic pen. (you can remove the pen after making the coil... :) Tune your receiver to the unwanted signal and tune the trimmer until you see the unwanted signal drop out. You may have to experiment with the coil turns and spacing, but this design will also help wipe out the unwanted station.

Fortunately your undesired signal is likely a constant-on transmission so it's always there for you to play with. Secondly, you can make and tinker with all this at home (provided you live within receiving range of the airport AWOS) and bring the working product to the airport for installation.

Good luck.

Active on 14325 right now.

Monday, September 19, 2005

As of the 8:00 a.m. • 1200 UTC intermediate advisory, Tropical Storm Rita is expected to become a Category 1 Hurricane late today. With the forecast track being dangerously close to Andros Island in the Bahamas tonight and Key West Florida by tomorrow, and given the fact that the wind field is very large, any slight deviation to the right of the forecast track could bring Hurricane force winds over the Florida Keys and South Florida Tuesday evening.

It is our plan that the Hurricane Watch Net activate this evening on 14.325.00 MHz at 7:00 p.m. EDT • 2300 UTC and remain active until 11:00 p.m. EDT- 0300 UTC, or until the 20 meter band folds, which ever comes first. We will then reactivate Tuesday morning at 9:00 a.m. EDT • 1300 UTC.

than audio fidelity. That's the nature of the beast, and everyone knows it.

These are the things that SW listeners care least about. If this is the primary appeal of DRM, it is thoroughly and completely doomed.

$200 US plus shipping from Canada.
With operation, service manuals. Carry strap.
This radio is next to new in condition. All controls work as new.
The gyro antenna also works like new with no play etc.
This is one very nice receiver.
My interest in the shortwave hobby is fading therefore I'm selling this radio, hopefully to someone who can appreciate the hobby as much as I once did.

I am making some assumtions here. You state that you only hear the AWOS when a transmission occurs on the CTAF freq. I would think this means that the receiver is NOT receiving the AWOS signal all the time or it would trigger the system constantly. If you listen to the receiver output while at the airport does it contain the AWOS audio or just the CTAF audio? My inclination is that the AWOS sig is being picked up by the interface circuitry between your receiver and the 88.1 transmitter. If this is the case then more bypassing and rf filtering is needed on the interface. Then again I could be barking up the wrong tree here, only some suggestions, hope it helps.

Cheers

While this approach looks good on paper, it often fails badly when the desired frequency is so close in to the notch frequency. I just put a quarter wave stub on our VNA and found that while it does diminish the 123 signal -33dB, it also attenuates the 120.6 signal by a whopping -22dB.
There is also an enormous VSWR upset -120:1 or so- this is perhaps not important in your receive only application.
Each year we build hundreds of filters for this exact application-AWOS/UNICOM separation. Typical insertion loss is under 1dB while the notch is >-40dB. The filter is about the size of a cigarette pack exclusive of the N connectors.

I'll have to think about that for BCB AM. I'm more

So the audio upgrade might not be the best idea, but definitely the external speaker is. Is that the case with the R70 as well, or just the R71A? It might be easier to get that R70 back before I get an R71A.

I seem to recall that Kiwa made some, too. I'll have to go check their website for info again. I know that the R-5000 filters come up regularly on eBay, however.

More trouble-free than the JRC's? I always thought that the JRC's (like the 515) were built like tanks.

There was some problem with edge connectors on JRC radios that would lead to intermitted behaviours at inopportune moments. The fix was a simple cleaning, but a PITA when you had to get serious and stay serious.

I have one of those Sony cassette decks with shortwave coverage on the tuner. Not bad performance, really. Has provided a lot of good listening on long-haul drives at night. Got it from that Jackys.com back in 2001.

It is FAR from over, after the FCC makes it's decision it goes to Court of Appeal where he can challenge the FCC rules and or decision. If he transmits, he will be unlicensed which can speed the process to the court systems like I said it's FAR from over.

I think you get narrower selectivity if you use an odd integer multiple of quarter wavelengths for the stub. The longer the line, the greater the phase change with frequency. A 1/4 wave shorted stub goes from open to short in a 1:2 frequency ratio. A 3/4 wavelength stub goes from open to short in 3:4 ratio of frequency. Etc. I think.

Nope. I'm talking about Deception Radio Mondiale.

LW and MW are around 24/7 but SW stations change frequencies all the time. It takes a little more effort to find a SW station.

Most women are clueless about technology but what about us guys?

But seriously what station is going to broadcast the whole SW station schedule in the background data stream. Do you have any idea how big that is? You would need to do this because schedules (times and frequencies) change all the time.

1. Fading
a. Fading is replaced with dropouts. I fail to understand how that can even be considered an improvement.

b. I don't find it the most annoying thing.

c. Analog has sync detection, which eliminates most of the fading most of the time. This is much better than drop outs.

2. Audio quality.
a. I have several analog radios that during real SW reception sound much better than the audio demonstration files on the DRM website.

b. An analog radio with sync detection would sound better than a DRM radio using the same radio spectrum bandwidth.

c. No LW broadcast in NA but I find that MW and SW are quite acceptable.

> (The term "near-FM" is marketing talk, just ignore it).

No I won't ignore it. The better sound quality hype is just another example of the sales deception that surrounds the DRM technology.

> It allows broadcasters to break into certain markets by broadcasting

I don't know about this. What exactly does the DRM technology have to do with enabling markets?

I would prefer that the DRM transmissions stay out of the international broadcast bands and stick to the digital utility frequencies.

Let me get over there behind my old antique pump organ (no puns,please) that I use for a stand for my two tv sets and reach around back there where I have my old GE so-called long distance radio stashed on the floor with about a dozen of my other old radios,I hope y'all appreciate me doing all of this,hang on a minute,,,,,,, Ok,it's a GE model number 7-2880E and on the front of the radio it says,General Electric and on the dial it says,Long Range High Selevtivity and also on the back of the radio it says,Made In Hong Kong and there are three screws for FM and GND and AM antenna.The radio works ok,just as good as new,nothing to jump for joy about and shout it from the rooftops though,but almost all of the chrome looking paint is gone because I used to take it to work with me when I worked at the auto/truck/lawnmower battery factory and that battery acid played heck on the radio.

True, because it can only when the two antenna's are far enough appart (wavelengh-wize), like on a car. On a portable device, it does not make that much sence.

But when you apply this technology in different frequencies, you can apply it with a single antenna.

Also note that in theory, using digital technology, you can add a time-offset between the two signals so that -if both signals fall away, you can hope to get a signal from the 2nd (delayed) signal by the time fadding has gone.

Both US satellite-radio systems have a time-offset between the signals from their satellites. (something like 3 seconds, IIRC); but it would be nice to test how much this would help on shortwave. My guess is that it would if you use transmissions on two signals close together as the fading for both signals will happen at almost the same time).

True.

I don't know. That' a marketing descision.

My main issue is that SW will stop working in most cases when you take your radio inside the house or when somebody switches on a device that creates that much QRM.

We will see.

> Won't the European Union standardize some of these bureaucratic problems?

This is not a juristicion of the EU. "Culture" is a national (and in most cases regional) issue.

The only thing the EU can say is that say you write out a competition for new FM-licences that you must treath foreign companies the same way as companies from your own country.

> Is there really much advantage to having one transmitter covering a huge > area? In the US, stations are individualized to the extent that they

In most European countries, there is a mix of a number of "national" radio-stations and a number of "local" radio-stations.

Sometimes, there are "localised" national radio-stations who are national stations broadcasting exactly the same signal for 99 % of the time, and only have a "local" signal for (say) 3 times 5 minutes a day.
(but they are marketed as a national radio-station).

Anycase, as any other digital broadcasting-system, DRM allows for broadcasting of "local" content over a national infrastructure; e.g. by using datacasting to broadcast the local content "on the side" and "insert" these audio-segments into the main broadcasting-stream when it is needed.
(A bit like sirius -or was it XM?- wants to do. -OK, it least, they have a patent for this).

>>We will see, but as DMR is a digital broadcasting-system, you can expect >>additional improvements in the receivers too.
> The performance of analog radios could have been improved, if people wanted > to pay for the improvements. The real improvements in analog radios over > the last few years has been in price.
True.

But the point I wanted to make is that the DRM spec is now out there and the real life transmissions have just started.

But what we will see next is that advanced transmissions- and receptions-techniques to start to be applied which will take it all to a next step.

I agree.

Well, there was advertisement video-clip on the website of RTL some time ago, which put it this way.

"OK, it's nice to listen to your favourate RTL station at home and in the car here in Germany; but what when you are on the beach in sunny spain during your summer-break? Well, using DRM, you will now be able to take your well-know RTL-station with you even when you are partying away in Ibiza".
(OK, something like that).

Perhaps DRM over SW will not provide 100 % garanteed reception, but for this kind of service, it may be sufficient good.

Anycase, we will see.

But concidering the fact that BCE have asked for two HF-frequencies for DRM, it looks that they are planning on trying it!

One thing to try is to rotate the antenna, so that the receiver antenna is in opposite polarisation than the transmitter position, one in vertical polarisation, the other horizontal polarisation. This will attenuate the offending signal by 10-20 dB. The null might be quite narrow, so you would have to slowly rotate your receiver antenna to find it.

If you defeat the squelch, do you constantly hear the AWOS transmission ? Does it matter if the 88.1 MHz FM transmitter is on or not ?

Any other VHF transmitters on site (VOR?) that might take part in the mixing process ? Do you hear any other background noises than the AWOS recording ?

Ill wind may not blow to the Whitehouse

By Newton Emerson

As the full horror of Hurricane Katrina sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if this is the end of George Bush's presidency. The answer is almost certainly yes, provided that every copy of the US Constitution was destroyed in the storm. Otherwise President Bush will remain in office until noon on January 20th, 2009, as required by the 20th Amendment, after which he is barred from seeking a third term anyway under the 22nd Amendment.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if the entire political agenda of George Bush's second term will not still be damaged in some terribly satisfying way.

The answer is almost certainly yes, provided that the entire political agenda of George Bush's second term consists of repealing the 22nd Amendment. Otherwise, with a clear Republican majority in both Houses of Congress, he can carry on doing pretty much whatever he likes.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if the Republican Party itself will now suffer a setback at the congressional mid-term elections next November.

The answer is almost certainly yes, provided that people outside the disaster zone punish their local representatives for events elsewhere a year previously, both beyond their control and outside their remit, while people inside the disaster zone reward their local representatives for an ongoing calamity they were supposed to prevent. Otherwise, the Democratic Party will suffer a setback at the next congressional election.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if an official inquiry will shift the blame for poor planning and inadequate flood defences on to the White House. The answer is almost certainly yes, provided nobody admits that emergency planning is largely the responsibility of city and state agencies, and nobody notices that the main levee which broke was the only levee recently modernised with federal funds. Otherwise, an official inquiry will pin most of the blame on the notoriously corrupt and incompetent local governments of New Orleans and Louisiana.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if George Bush contributed to the death toll by sending so many national guard units to Iraq.

The answer is almost certainly yes, provided nobody recalls that those same columnists have spent the past two years blaming George Bush for another death toll by not sending enough national guard units to Iraq. Otherwise, people might wonder why they have never previously read a single article advocating large-scale military redeployment during the Caribbean hurricane season.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnist are asking how a civilised city can descend into anarchy.

The answer is that only a civilised city can descend into anarchy.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if George Bush should be held responsible for the terrible poverty in the southern states revealed by the flooding.

The answer is almost certainly yes, provided nobody holds Bill Clinton responsible for making Mississippi the poorest state in the union throughout his entire term as president, or for making Arkansas the second-poorest state in the union throughout his entire term as governor. Otherwise, people might suspect that it is a bit more complicated than that.

As the full horror of this sinks in, thousands of desperate columnists are asking if George Bush should not be concerned by accusations of racism against the federal government.

The answer is almost certainly yes, provided nobody remembers that Jesse Jackson once called New York "Hymietown" and everybody thinks Condoleezza Rice went shopping for shoes when the hurricane struck because she cannot stand black people.

Otherwise sensible Americans of all races will be more concerned by trite, cynical and dangerous political opportunism.

As the full horror of that sinks in, this columnist is simply glad that everybody cares.

There's different kinds of diversity reception. Antenna diversity reception involves two or more antennas seperated by a distance of a few wavelengths or more. Polorization diversity reception uses antennas whose polorization is at right angles to one another. Frequency diversity uses different frequencies. At least that's the types of diversity reception listed in my copy of "The Radio Engineer's Handbook" (copyright 1943). None of these concepts were presented as anything new at the time. I think the Hallicrafters Double Diversity Receiver was capable of all three kinds of diversity reception with the right antennas. The DDR was sold -- well, was offered, as very few were sold -- to the public in the late 30s.

Right. I suppose that could be called time diversity reception, although I don't think anybody uses that term.

Does DRM allow a time delay stream? I'd think such a system would be more attactive for most people, rather than a single higher fidelity stream.

That sounds a bit like what the US radio networks do. They provide blocks of programming, and the local stations get sections of time to insert their own programming.

Yes, but as you suggested, this comes down to marketing. If DRM doesn't fufill people's expection of what radio ought to be, then the next step will be the next false start.

What sort of portable?? Most portables will suffer from overload with an antenna that long. A few, such as the DX-398 or DX-440 can handle a longwire.

The absence of up/down tuning buttons (slewing) 0-9 digital keypad, or

Rather than building a trap, why not use a narrow bandpass filter?
Also, if you are that close to both transmitters, try attenuating the signal from the antenna to prevent overloading the receiver.

One other idea. if the signal is from a transmitter at the airport, why not see if you can take the audio feed to that transmitter and feed the FM transmitter.

The e-Bay seller is in New York you flipping fool.

Iowa State University has recently announced the discovery of the heaviest chemical element yet known to science. The new element has been tentatively named "Governmentium."

Governmentium has 1 neutron, 12 assistant neutrons, 75 deputy neutrons, and 11 assistant deputy neutrons, giving it an atomic mass of 312. These 312 particles are held together by forces called morons.

These, in turn, are surrounded by vast quantities of lepton-like particles called peons. Since Governmentium has no electrons, it is inert. However, it can be detected as it impedes every reaction with which it comes into contact.

A minute amount of Governmentium causes one reaction to take over 4 days to complete when it would normally take less than a second.
Governmentium has a normal half-life of 4 years; it does not decay, but instead undergoes a reorganization in which a portion of the assistant neutrons and deputy neutrons exchange places.

In fact, governmentium's mass will actually increase over time, since each reorganization will cause some morons to become neutrons, forming isodopes. This characteristic of moron-promotion leads some scientists to speculate that Governmentium is formed whenever morons reach a certain quantity in concentration.

Sony ICF-SW7600GR

I thought using a long wire I would be able to pick up more broadcasts. I didn't consider overloading the receiver, how I should handle this?

Thank you!

The links are groovy and all, but actually in the real world, it's fairly rare to need impedance matching for a random or long wire, to a coax center pin.
Only with very short wires, might it really be worthwhile.
But with any wire say, 50 ft or longer, the use of impedance matching is usually totally unneeded for any decent HF radio. The chance of a mismatch lowering the actual s/n ratio is slim. I almost never use matching on random wires to any of my radios. It's just not needed. You have such a high overall signal level that losing a bit won't hurt you. For sure on the lower bands. If I were to wanna match a random wire, I would use a random wire tuner. IE: MFJ 16010, or whatever it is... "I have owned one since the late 70's". Using a tuner can reduce image problems in cheaper radios.
On the high bands, sometimes a tuner can help to peak things up, but even still it's unlikely to actually increase the s/n ratio much when using a random wire to the center pin only. Test it and see. Only when the atmo noise level doesn't drop when unhooking the antenna is there a problem.
If you hook up the antenna, and the noise increases, even slightly, it's really as good as it's gonna get, unless you just want to pump up the S meter. If you end up actually needing matching on many bands, you gotta really dead front end.
Just mentioning this in case some read the title, and think it's actually required for good reception. I've run a jillion random wires of various length with nothing more than sticking it in the center pin of the radio. Never had a problem with lack of signal, unless the wire was super short.

The technical solutions, so far presented, are about as good as you're going to get while still keeping the cost reasonable. However, you ARE dealing with a consumer grade radio that was simply not designed to any particular standard of interference rejection. And that you've packaged this with a transmitter operating within the FM band also offers the potential for overload artifacts on a broad spectrum of frequencies. Sony Air 8, however, was known to experience this kind of problem even off-airport. It would even pass 11 meter CB on a good day if the signal was close, or large enough. As did some Sony FM broadcast rigs of the period when an aircraft was reasonably nearby.

I lived 2 miles off the approach end of 30L/30R at Lambert, St Louis for years, and I'd get aircraft to tower chatter on my Sony portable at 103.3, 102.5, even 93.7 everytime an aircraft went overhead. The front end was simply not robust enough to withstand a close-in assault of any magnitude. Nor was the chassis shielded well enough to prevent leakage through the IF's. Your real option may to select a different receiver. If you're doing this as a favor to the airport, you may get a decommissioned rig culled from a wrecked aircraft, or one that's been sitting on the shelf at one of the FBO's, donated to the cause. In that case, robust interference rejection is assured for your purpose.

There is, however another, and potentially greater issue at play here.

Rebroadcast of non broadcast radio frequencies may be in violation of several communications acts. Brush up on your regs, and be sure you're in compliance. In today's climate, there is always some asshat who has to make trouble for his jollies bringing the letter of the law down on fairly innocuous activities that may actually benefit someone.
And with overlapping laws written the way they are, today, you may be in compliance with one law, while in violation of another.

One of my colleagues, downstate, got a spanking for a similar type of service involving Air/Water show comms for a small airport near his home. Someone complained. Even though there was no interference was measured, and all hardware was in compliance for license free application. Unauthorized rebroadcast of comm channels was the issue.

So, make sure your ducks are in a row.

While our best and bravest fight and die in an elective war, based on faulty intelligence from the same agencies that missed the coming of 9/11; while Americans have no reason to expect their government to respond competently to a major disaster even after what we learned from 9/11, with countless dollars spent on "homeland security", run by inept political hacks; while the largest budget deficit in the history of the universe continues to grow with no end in sight; and as the president's approval rating is in the toilet, it's interesting to see that one columnist doesn't get it.

If you are not fussy about portable vs tabletop, have a look for a RS DX-394. They are easily modified with lots of space to mount the converter inside. The B model will give the best results on DRM but the A and original models can be modified to match the B's superior stability. And if you are into 'hacking' radios, the DX-394 has more potential and more published mods than any other radio with a big user group.
Always one for auction on ebay, frequently in UK.

Yeah Rev. Those migrating ducks carrying the Communist Chinese genetically engineered bird flu virus were let loose on the world. It is a similar technique used by Japan during W.W.II. The Japanese built deadly weather balloons with altimeters and bombs on board and set them loose into the jet stream heading right towards the Pacific Northwest of the U.S. Only this time they are ducks carrying biological bombs - Peking Duck!

I'm not the 7600GR expert, but I like to use the old tried and true method of experimentation. You can always solder wire if need be, so I'd start with either a long wire of 10' or so, string it through the house and see what happens. If you don't overload the receiver, you can go longer.

If the receiver doesn't have an external antenna input (can't recall if the 7600 does or not), you can use a toroid core with a section of wire wrapped around it. Joe Carr in his book Joe Carr's Receiving Antenna Handbook recommended a T37 or T50 core, with #26 enameled wire wrapped around it. One end of the wire goes to ground, and the other end to the antenna.
The toroid would then fit over the portable SW receiver's telescoping antenna. For the higher bands, use 20 turns; for the lower bands (<= 7 MHz) use 8-10. (Page 33 of the book, for those interested.)

Those two 'undercover' agents HAD to be 'rescued' before they spilled the beans. By all accounts it appears that IF they had not been caught, the news media would have reported 'Sunni Attack on Police kills two!".

That causes great animosity towards the Sunni and the Civil War is another step closer. The splitting up of greater Iraq into three parts is that much nearer.

If the two could not have been extricated easily, they would have been killed by the rescuers to prevent them from talking. This is most certainly NOT the first time the invaders have committed atrocities in order to fan the flames of hatred. It's an old trick. The phrase 'By deceit will you wage war' comes to mind.

If these two were innocent of any guilt, the normal process of negotiation with the legitimate Iraqi police would have begun instead of the jail breakout of felons.

Brits dressed like Arabs killing policemen? What the hell has happened to the integrity of Britain's finest? Blair?

So, it was the MGA/Mitsubishi tv which you put the magnet on in the Goodwill store..ok..It would appear Honus apologized to you in error.

The Sony that you put the magnet on was in a DIFFERENT store.

Now I get it. Out of curiosity, just how many times have you played this magnet trick and in how many different stores?

Never even once.It is a trick I read about in a magazine over fifty years ago.You would have to use a big powerfull magnet to make it work anyway.I carry my little bitty magnet on my keychain for when or if I want to check metal for steel or brass.

Think about the many different kinds of things that may be sitting on top of tv sets all over the World.Everything from A to Z.Many of those things are probally magnetized to some extent and there are bound to be many other folks around the World who have magnets on their keychains sitting on top of their tv sets.A lot of folks who work in scrap metal yards carry keychain magnets on their keychains or in their pockets for checking metal.

Chertov the ex-judge and Republican backshooter from Colorado, who did the Whitewater beat-up investigation into Bill Clinton's affairs, 'got the job' as Head of Homeland Security.
It was Chertov who was in charge of the Federal response to Katrina, and the anal retentive hardliner turned out to be the political opportunist he always was.
Chertov made his name doing Mafia Trials; and as Head of Homeland Security he would have been better letting the mob handle things - at least they would have been ' organised '.
The corruption of thinking that has been shown by this 'administration', will I hope, lead the American people to give a woman a go and let the world see a woman - Hilary Clinton - lead their country into a new era.

SkyWire Loop Antenna [Was: Wire loop.] Question
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/SkyWires/message/1311
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5366

If both ends are coming together to form a Loop :
Then it is Balanced and can be feed directly via Ladder Line or Coax Cable. With Coax Cable as a Feed-Line; you could also use a 1:1 Matching Transformer (Balun) if the Loop is going to be used for both Tx & Rx.

NOTE - 240 Feet of wire puts you at about 4.2 MHz with a SkyWire Loop Antenna.

FWIW - If this Loop Antenna is 'only' for Receiving then a 4:1 Matching Transformer (Balun) could be use with Coax Cable as a Feed-in-Line.

SKYWIRE LOOP ANTENNA :
This type of Large and Low Loop Antenna is generally

KTRH Houston, also a 50KW station but using a directional antenna pattern, should be listenable to much of the Midwest depending on conditions.

As much as I would like to think the FCC will shut this guy down permanently, I don't really think they have gotten that much closer.
K1MAN seems to be relatively fast on his feet because he knows how to stretch the administrative process and just ignore rulings.
The FCC on the other hand seems to personify the hidebound federal agency that is so tied up in its own administrative process that it can only react sluggishly to violations of the law.

I've always wondered if Baxter sits up nights listening to himself rebroadcast over and over and over.

Rather than re-broadcasting the signal why not try something simpler.
Just set up an Airport Traffic room within the airport and pipe the audio in. Hang some old pictures and other memorabilia of the airport on the walls to make it interesting.

Can anyone help me with a copy of a user manual for the ERA Microreader please.

I've googled and looked around and can't find one although I believe that there used to be a .pdf version somewhere.

I know the ERA isn't cutting edge and not rocket science to use but a manual is always nice to have with it for "senior moments" when the brain goes blank.

Any costs happily reimbursed of course.

KTRH has gotta beam towards the west and south because KRMG Tulsa operates 25000 watts at night on 740 MHz towards the east and north.

WBAP Fort Worth on 820 MHz sounds like a local all throughout the midwest at night.

Here in the Chicago area, 740 is dominated by CHWO at night.

I've been using the Palomar MLB with 82ft of random wire over my house with a dedicated ground on my R-75 for a couple years now. The MLB makes a dramatic difference in the noise level while increasing the signal strength anywhere on the SW spectrum. Seems like a lot of people are missing out on some good dx and a generally more pleasant to listen to radio because they have not tried this minor purchase. All I have to do is try a direct connection to the radio's center pin and the degradation of performance is large- under any atmospheric conditions.

You're not matching the wire to the radio. You're matching the wire to the coaxial cable. It makes a huge difference.

Wayne Green had by far the best solution to the problem back in 1992:

Wayne Green W2NSD/1
WGI Center
Peterborough NH 03458

Sep. 13, 1992

"While I can appreciate your frustration with Baxter, which I share, your approach to disenfranchising him seems to indicate that you either do not read my editorials or at least don't remember them. I've God knows how many times been quite blunt about NOT annoying the FCC with our problems. That's not only a waste of time, it's downright dangerous... and can cause far more trouble than poor little Baxter. Please remember that we keep trying to convince the FCC that we are self-regulating. Note the term "self."

If a few hams ever want to get rid of Baxter that's not all that difficult... and you don't even have to pay a hit man to clean off 14,275. All it takes is a little creativity and some coordinated effort.

As a matter of fact it would be fun to wipe out Baxter. And you wouldn't even have to have a small group of like-minded hams drive to Maine with hack saws for his coax and tower or a concentrated campaign to turn his neighbors against him with propaganda. No, all it would take is a few hams with good signals and some coordination.

I'm sure you can come up with much more fitting tortures for Baxter than anything I could dream up, but my mind turns to getting the channel about ten minutes before his broadcasts with my own anti-IARN broadcasts. I'll bet I could come up with some material which would burn Baxter, yet would not quite be actionable. Or I might tape one of his broadcasts and just repeat it as a "service" right on top of him and wipe him out. I've got as good a signal as anyone and I'm only a couple hundred miles from him. Knowing the love they have for him in Maine I'm sure you can find one, two or even three strong stations fairly near him to join in the effort to "help" him get his broadcasts out.

Of course if you don't know anyone capable of outsmarting Baxter, then you have no choice but to give up and take up stamp collecting. Baxter may be loud, but I haven't yet seen any signs of a three digit IQ behind the mess he's been making for several years.

If you do decide to actually do something instead of wasting your time on the FCC and ARRL, please let me know. "

Cheers ...
Wayne

I think I can guess, but it does seem a more obscure term, especially since it's specific to some radios.

I think it's "Computer Aided Tuning", at least from context. Some radios have a serial port on the back, allowing you to hook up a computer so you can tune from the computer, and more obviously run software to do interesting things like scanning or going through really large numbers of specific frequencies (like really large memory for frequencies you want to remember).

It might be a term specific to one brand of radio, but I'm not sure. Since I've never had a radio that has the ability, I've not paid much attention.

A couple of weeks ago one of them black Helicopters (they are really a dark grey color) was flying low over my house coming from a Northeast direction flying a Southwestward direction.I figure it was heading toward Baton Rouge or somewhere in South Texas or who knows where.The next day when I was coming out of the wal mart store (food department) with my shopping cart I saw another black Helicopter flying in a Northeastward direction.They might be based at the Mississippi Air National Guard in Flowood, (greater Jackson metro area) Mississippi for all I know.My old buddys oldest son is a Chief Flight Loader on the C-17 Aircraft in the Mississippi Air National Guard,next time I see him,I will try to think to ask if they have any black Helicopters over there.There might be something on their website about that,but I am not going snooping around there on the internet.Yesteday morning,another black Helicopter flew over my street.I assure y'all,they aren't interested in me,they have much more important business to take care of than wanting to spy on me.They have been flying over my neighborhood for years as well as many other neighborhoods all over America.This afternoon a woman about thirtish something years old knocked on my door.She was wearing a black Bell South shirt and tan colored trousers,her hair color matches the color of the trousers she had on.She is moving into the vacant house next door to me.

HERE WE GO AGAIN !!!

I'll fire the first shot. I own an R75 with full Kiwa mods, and I have used an R8, R8A & R8B. I find that the R75 is a better radio for utility and DX'ing. I also find the R75 to be an adequate radio for program listening before it gets any mods and a very good radio for program listening after the Kiwa sync and audio mods. I find the R8B to be SUPERLATIVE as a program listening radio and very good as a DX'ing rig. I dont care what any of the bench statistics are, the R75 performs better as a DX'ing rig then the R8B. I could resolve DX signals with the R75 that I could not with the R8B. I dont care how good the am synch is on the R8B is, or how good the audio quality is. Those advantages count for nothing when your trying to DX very weak and messy signals. For that type of work, you are best served putting your rig in SSB and using ECSS tuning. In that capacity, the R75 is a more capable rig. I dont need to see bench test stats of any kind. I learned this through actual use of both rigs. The R75 performs better for DX'ing then the R8B.

Also keep in mind that I did my trials and comparisons of both Radios with two very good antennas.

Now, lets here from DXAce

Hi,

2nd post, the first contained an error, the new address should have been given as www.ukradioamateur.co.uk

Some of you, hopefully many of you, may be aware of the existence of the "Amateur Radio Course" project which provides a number on-line and downloadable tutorials for the various UK amateur radio examinations.

Due to the sudden, unexpected and unexplained withdrawal of support by the company who up to now have very kindly hosted our web-site free of charge, and their even more unexpected failure to communicate with me regarding how we might transfer or redirect the URL which they registered for us but now will not let us use, our site is no longer available to the clubs and individuals who benefited from it.

Can you therefore help us and please publicise as widely as possible the following information.

The "Amateur Radio Course" which was located at www.ukradioamateur.org is now relocated at www.ukradioamateur.co.uk

There may be a number of functions that are not working due to the sudden move, but they will be fixed within the next few days.

It remains, as always, a non-profit making activity sponsored and supported entirely by the group of individuals who give up their time and resources free of charge to support and promote interest in the hobby.

I apologise for posting this message in so many newsgroups, but I need the new URL to be publicised as rapidly as possible.

Many thanks to you for your help, best wishes and 73's

I'm not that far from you and I can pick out KTRH using a Terk loop with a Boston Recepter on the night stand.
It isn't usually armchair copy but when conditions are very good it is easily readable. Besides KTRH & WBAP
I don't know of any other MW stations in Tejas that are in hurricane Rita's strike zone and can make it out of the Southwest.

I can honestly say I own neither, but from having seen the discussions on r.r.s before about those two, the IC-R75 is good value for the money, but the R8B (and the AOR 7030+) are better in absolute terms. Seems to be the consensus that if you're on a budget, an IC-R75 will do well. If you do the work needed to make the R75 roughly the equal of the R8B, you'll end up spending enough money extra to make the cost difference between the R8B and the R75 vanish.

Peter and I were just in a thread about the R75's sync, and he was mentioning that he received info from an Icom rep on how to properly work the sync that isn't in the manual online. Did you hear about anything like that when you were comparing the two??

Of course, the mean between the two extremes (you and Ace) is pretty much that the R75 is good value for the money. The entertaining comparisons are the Sat 800 vs. the R75. Of course, the E1 could sub for the Sat 800 these days.

$600's too much isn't it? Ask HRO about promotional deals, etc.
Nudge, nudge, wink, wink.

I have both. The R-75 works pretty darn well. I put my SW-2 on the dhelf for a while and the R-75 is my bedside AM radio now. Works real well on AMDX if you use SSB mode. DSP, AM Sync useless. But for $500 or so it's a well-built and decent performer.

Mike, I dont agree with you. I think the R75 is a better radio for DX'ing then the R8B. Just because the R75 cost WAY less then the R8B, it dosent have to mean that the R75 dosent perform better then the R8B. I've used both radios and the R75 was better for resolving difficult DX.

Thanks for the comparisons.

A guy down the street has a R75 for sale and I can take it for a test drive.

I'll probably go for one and play with it for a while. Yea, $600 is a lot of money for a radio. Especially since I'm into the Drake for $900 and I still need to get the tuning resolver fixed! At least I got the VHF card and the MS-8 speaker for the price. If the guy down the street wants to let his go for a reasonable price I might jump on that. Otherwise I'll get HRO to make a deal with me. They are a nice bunch. Just north of here and UPS ground gets here next day every time I order from em.

When I talk absolute terms, I don't mean DX only.
I meant essentially a radio that can do it all, and where the radios rank there. Discounting both you and Ace as the two ends of the spectrum, the consensus seems to be that the R8B is the better overall radio, but the R75 is a good radio overall for the price point. If you can live without a great stock sync, the R75 is a good radio.

I am listening to KTRH Houston right now on my Panasonic model RF-708 AM/FM radio,in fact,any of my radios that work at all and have the AM band can pick up KTRH. Quite a bit of long distance background noise though.A guy by the name of Chris at KTRH said they will be simulcasting with their sister FM station.

Mike, I think your commentary is fair, but you haven't stated that the R75 is a better DX'ing radio. Many people that have used both radios including myself prefer the R75 to the R8B for DX'ing because it does a better job resolving very weak and messy DX. That's not brand loyalty, that is user proven fact. Add to that, the R75 is a very good radio for program listening. The criticisms with the R75's stock AM synch and audio section are WAY over worked. Even if it is unmodified, with an external speaker, the R75 is perfectly adequate for program listening. The criticisms with the R75's stock AM synch and audio section are WAY over worked. In my opinion, that makes the R75 the better ultimate value and the WAY better value for dollar.

I think it means "Computer Aided Transceiver" but, while the acronym is commonly used, it's rare to find it expanded. The Icom CI-V protocol is a specification for a CAT interface. There is a good listing of CAT applications and interfaces at http://www.dk0tui.de/ham/ham_cat.html.

Bob-

By now you have probably solved your problem. If not, someone else suggested that you insert attenuation in the Sony's antenna lead. I think that approach is most likely to produce the results you want.

If you were to replace the Sony's antenna with a dummy load, there may still be sufficient signal bleeding into the radio to make your system work. The interfering signal would also bleed into the radio, but at such a low level that the Sony's tuned circuits ought to be able to handle it.

If even this does not solve the interference, you may find the problem to be audio rectification inside the 88.1 equipment, perhaps in the oscillator stage!

Please keep us informed of what it takes to make it work.

I am thinking about buying a Wellbrook ALA-1530 antenna to hookup to one of the following radios: Icom 718, Icom 703 and/or a Radio Shack DX-398 (aka Sangean ATS-909). Yes I realize it is a receive only antenna. I will be using it for mostly shortwave and some AM.

Has anybody had any experience good or bad with this unit? Does anybody have a suggestion of something better? Any comments appreciated.

But since Yaesu, who seems to be the originator of "CAT", uses it in their FRG-100 receiver, Computer Aided Tuning would indeed be more descriptive.

And given that the original poster did not seem to be clueless and posting an off-topic question here, clearly the "CAT" relates to radio, and so many of the replies are irrelevant.

Interesting. Thanks.

Well, one of the things about technology is that sometimes "textbook technology" which has existed for long only in books or in very specialised applications (usually defence) just becomes mainstream. Take COFDM or CDMA.

I was reading an small article on the VCT (Voice Channel Telegraphy) technologies, and overthere they use time-diversity and frequency diversity too.
They put the same telegraphy-signal multiple times into the same
VCT-channel, put all with a different time-offset.

>>Both US satellite-radio systems have a time-offset between the signals

In theory, every digital signal allows for time-diversity on the condition that the signal on both channels in exactly the same.

So, if you build it into a receiver, then yes, you can do this.

DRM puts a identification-tag on every stream (which is shared with DAB, FM/RDS and probably also the upcoming RDS-over-AM standard so it allows receivers to switch between the different broadcasting-channel) and the "AF" (alternative frequency) information allows for the receiver to find the additional streams.

AFAIK, there is no indication of a stream is delayed or not, but that's something the receiver can find out by himself.

Now, I don't think there is anything in the specs for a situation where you would put the same signal twice inside the same DRM transport-stream (one delayed to the other) and give them both the same streamid, so I don't know how a receiver would react to that. (some of them will probably crash :-))

Perhaps that's something to add in the specs.

True, with the difference that in the US-system, the individual radio-stations are all different legal entities by themselfs.

Overhere, there only is a single legal entity and when there are no local broadcasts, all transmittors transmit exactly the same signal.
(which is why using FM/RDS "AF" and these networks of transmittors, you can drive from one side of the country to the other side and keep tuned to the same radio-station.

True. My personal opinion is that -concidering the interest of quite a lot of the big broadcasters- it will succeed, but we will see.

That's what "AF" is for. (Alternative Frequency information inserted into the DRM stream, just like on FM/RDS).

First of all, that's not such a big issue, as there do exist things like the "EPG". It broadcasting-technology neutral so it can be used in DAB, DVB and DRM.

Second, the only thing the radio will do is scan all frequencies it can receive and compose a list based on that. That's how DAB radios work nowdays too.

Only if the signal goes below a certain S/N threshold.

> b. I don't find it the most annoying thing.

Well, last year I was in Northern Italy and I was listening to the worldservice of the public broadcaster of Flanders (dutch-speaking belgium) on shortwave; and -to be honest- my wife was pretty anoyed by the fading-element.

Somebody who just "hears" a radio (so, who is not really "listening") is used to have a radio with a more-or-less constant quality-signal. They are not really used to have a radio sound good, then get all kind of noice, then sound good again, and then with noice again.

It attacks their attention and this annoys them. Radio should be a "background noice" thing and this means that is should be more-or-less constant.

AFAIK, sync detection is against partial-cochannel interference, not against fading.

True, but there are stations who also sound worse.

Do you actually have a DRM-radio? Can you compair?

> c. No LW broadcast in NA ...
Correct, but I read somewhere that Australia is thinking of restarting broadcasts on LW (because of DRM).

Most NDBs have disappeared from that band overthere.

> ... but I find that MW and SW are quite acceptable.
Are there domestic SW-broadcasts in the NA? CBC/RC?

>>(The term "near-FM" is marketing talk, just ignore it).

> No I won't ignore it. The better sound quality hype is just another > example of the sales deception that surrounds the DRM technology.

No, I meant that the term "near FM" is just marketing-talk. It allows for better audio then AM, that is for sure but it all depends on what mode you use.

If you listen to a very-low bitrate auxilairy channel (e.g. one used for broadcasting traffic-messages) it will sound much worse then FM.
If you use it in the 20 KHz mode in the 11 meter broadcasting-band, it will probably sound better then FM.

The audio-quality-issue is technically much more complex then this, but -marketing-wize- "near FM" is probably the simplest thing to say.

>>It allows broadcasters to break into certain markets by broadcasting

It allows them to broadcast with a "accepable" signal across the borders so that -using their Luxembourg license- they can "break into" other markets.

Why not. The more channels, the better.

Anycase, the biggest user of DRM will probably be not in Europe, but will be in China. (for a very different reason, but that's a different discussion).

>>For SW, they have asked the HFCC for coordination for two

Why is that. If they are general-public broadcasts, that's where they belong, isn't it?

What does a x. KW high-power general-public broadcasting-station do in the same band as medium-power utility-broadcasts?

If these broadcasts are analog or digital are IMHO of no importance.

I'm guessing that because of all the new B.S. concerning Homeland Security, the airport probably has a fence around it with a security coded gate control so that non-pilots can't get onto the field...

Why do you think DRM ultimately failed? I think it was simply an idea that was behind its time, meaning it would have been successful 50 years ago, but is an anachronism today. It's neat that there are still some DRM broadcasts around, but don't count on that to continue. In particular, don't sink a lot of money into a DRM-capable receiver.

I own an R75, have had a chance to use the R8B at length on a few occasions. If you did a left column/right column point-by-point, I think the Drake would come out ahead, though not by much. On a value-per-dollar basis, the Drake shrinks to second place immediately. Botoom line is that both are excellent receivers, though.

Amazingly enough, some people still want to ride this storm out. I mean, 100 years ago, Galveston was practically wiped off the map. You'd think that

Ah, but the reason why I can't is because I haven't personally listened to them both side by side. I can only go on what people here and elsewhere (such as on eham.net or dxing-info or other places) have said, and it seems that in overall terms, the R8B is the better of the two.

Hmm what a mess - lets start over

CAT is Yaesu's Acronym for Computer Aided Transceiver.

This allows the Transceiver settings to be controlled by a computer, can be used with some logging programs. Requires software and an appropriate cable.

For details go to the Yaesu page for the FT-857 at URL:

http://www.yaesu.com/indexVS.cfm?cmd=DisplayProducts&ProdCatID=102&encProdID=YrZ%2BU8%2FkWXc%3D&DivisionID=65&isArchived=0--CL

Now click on FILES

Then click on FT-857 pdf (3.09 MB)

On page 115, read all about CAT for this transceiver

Uhhh...before you go too far, be sure to read the reviews on this Weather Radio. It's a mixed bag, especially with comments like: When left turned on to silently monitor for the alert tones, the speaker constantly emits static just loud enough to be annoying in an otherwise quiet room, making bedside use next to impossible. Or: My radio might be an anomoly, but it is expensive for what I got (and didn't get).

It's never a good idea to use vigilante tactics to solve a problem. There are rules for which all of us must abide. One of those rules is that we must not intentionally block or interfere with another transmission that is in progress. We must all share the frequencies in an orderly fashion.

These are the rules. If we were to all ignore these rules and transmit whenever, however, and wherever we pleased, there would be mass chaos on most bands. The rules are structured and enforced by the FCC. I cannot condone any other approach to eliminating unruly examples like K1MAN--as frustrating as that approach may be.

I'm pleased with it. Great performer with no problems, and I do leave it on all the time in my bedroom and haven't noticed any background noise. Admittedly, the ergonomics are pretty obnoxious.

To the OP: mine does just fine with the integrated whip; do you know that you need an external antenna for it?

DXing can mean different things to different people. To some, it means being able to catch an ID and/or address in an otherwise unlistenable broadcast. To others, it might mean being able to understand the bulk of the broadcast, so that you can understand what's being discussed.

At least in my experience, ECSS tuning is especially well-suited to the former type of DXing, but not so well-suited to the latter type of DXing. Why? Because constantly changing noise conditions and adjacent frequency interference limits your ability to twist all the knobs in just the right way at just the right time. That's why the latter sort of DXing, at least in my opinion, benefits from an outstanding sync detector like the R8B's. It makes signals more listenable, not just for a moment, but for the long haul.

These are generalizations of course. I'm not saying ECSS tuning never works over the long haul. Sometimes it does, but not as well or as reliably as sync detection. That's why DXers need BOTH ECSS tuning AND sync detection.

I saw some a few months ago at a toy store. Those things take solder better than about anything I have ever seen. I overlap the ends and wrap them really tightly with small gauge bare wire and solder the hell out of it and after it's up, spray it heavily with clear paint and it will last 10-15 years. You would be amazed at how far two or three will stretch out on a rope.

I used to watch Jimmy Durante's once a week tv shows back in the 1950's/1960's.Songs and music and jokes,at the end of his once a week tv shows,he would be singing and playing that piano and he would always say,Good night Mrs.Calabash wherever you are! He was a great guy,Jimmy Durante was.What a Catastastrope! I watched a movie on tv a few days ago that had Jimmy Durante in the movie,but I don't remember the title of the movie.It was sort of a Military tome movie.

There's a big difference between moving away permanently and moving out of harm's way. I don't really care if they move away permanently or not, but man, if you've got a big beast out there bearing down on you, you don't just decide to "ride it out" when everyone's telling you to get the hell out of Dodge. (And you have the means to get out.) The "it'll never happen to me" line of defense usually doesn't work when you're at ground zero.

Looks like in a few days,perhaps next week,I will be getting some winds from hurricane Rita too.I already had about ten shingles blown off the top of my house by Katrina,I don't want any more blown off.Once in a while the wind is slightly breezy here from Rita,I think.Usually in normal weather,there are no breezes at all around here.If they aren't already,there probally will be some folks from Louisiana heading for Jackson again.Rita is going to curve to the Northeast after it makes landfall.No body really knows yet exactly what Rita is going to do.

But wouldn't a new radio crashing DRM spec make at least some of the new DRM radios at least partially obselete? If so, that's bad marketing. Once the radios start selling, they're pretty much stuck with whatever works with all the DRM radios.

The real decision will be made by the public. In the US, the broadcasters had a great amount of enthusisiam for AM stereo. There were some radios offered, but, for the most part, the public didn't care. AM stereo just never caught on, for whatever reason.

I suppose it's possible that DRM may also be an incomplete success. For example, the public might find the occasional SW dropouts too annoying, but they might very much like the improved signal to noise ratio on LW.

It it?

Meds still not working quite right?

Radio hobbyists refer to the reception of an AM signal using the SSB mode on a receiver as "ECSS reception", regardless of how a 'tard boy wants to slice and dice it.

About 224 miles from Houston (do y'all realize what the metro area population of Houston is? it's about four million or more) to Dallas (Fort Worth/Dallas metroplex is more than that) and some folks are trying to go even further to other destinations.Biggest waster of gasoline and diesel fuel in vehicles is stop and go city traffic and most of those vehicles going from Houston to Dallas and other places are barely moving at all, some of those folks are going to be sitting out there on the interstates and highways stranded without any fuel and can't get any fuel for quite a while.

All,

Thanks for all the suggestions, advice and information. I learned a lot about VHF that I didn't know. Should have stayed with it way back when I almost finished my "Novice" amateur license (couldn't manage the Morse code part -- I guess that gives away my age).

Fred nailed it, although by the time I saw his note, I'd solved the problem. After relocating the receiver as far away as I could (60 feet, given the limitation of where the units needed to be and sources of power) which didn't really help, I tried some simple filters, etc. During the course of this, someone keyed a mike while I had the antenna disconnected, and it worked fine with no antenna connected! A bit more experimentation indicated that the 120.6 interference dropped out completely while the desired 123 signal could still be picked up from five miles away if I left the short coax jumper inside the box from the receiver to the antenna disconnected at the antenna end. I'm not sure I fully understand why I still get a pretty robust signal this way, but I guess enough 123 MHz RF is leaking in from the bare antenna or all the other wiring. Since the radio traffic of interest is mostly local planes near the airport or in the traffic pattern, a five mile radius is probably more than adequate, and this is certainly the cheapest solution.

I will also look into the regulations about rebroadcasting non-commercial radio signals. The transmitter satisfies the part 15(IIRC?) FCC reg about a 100-foot reception limit, but I thought the rules about rebroadcasting were to prevent <commercial> rebroadcasting. The 100 foot limitation will keep all reception on the airport grounds, but I will do some more research on this. Thanks.

As far as an area inside the building where people can listen to the radio is concerned, we already have that. This project is for the people who sit in their cars in the parking lot and watch the planes on their lunch hour, etc. We get quite a few of these. Anything that improves relations with the general public should help alleviate some of the problems we have with the neighbors. I still can't understand how anyone can buy a house near an airport, and then feel that they have a right to complain about airplane noise. The airport has been there since 1946, but that's another issue.

Again, thanks for all the help.

My turn...

Lots of really good ideas here. Make sure it is the Sony antenna that is picking it up...

1- The stub-trap idea may work with some large number of odd-quarter waves. As you stack more odd multiples of quarter waves on (extend the shunt trap length), the dips get closer together and as a result the peak-to-null distance shrinks. A stub that is 21 quarter waves long has peaks and nulls very close together (you could calculate this). Of course the dips will be less deep due to cable loss. This may make it easier to get the desired "Pass / Null" response. You need to make sure the signal is getting into the antenna and not the receiver itself. The 2.4 Mc spacing is quite close.

NEW IDEA:
2- Try tuning it on the image (for your 123 Unicom frequency). You will probably need to do this away from the airport . You should hear the Unicom in two places on the dial spaced _TWICE_ the IF frequency away. These radios usually have pretty wide front ends There may be a schematic inside the radio to help determine this. If the IF is 0.455, the image is 0.910 away. This radio probably uses low side injection meaning the LO is below the 123 by 0.455. Therefore you must tune the radio 0.910 HIGHER than 123. This places the on channel further away from the 120.6 AWOS. Not knowing the IF, you have to hunt.
-Maybe doing this _AT_ the airport will yield a tuning that fixes it. Just try "tuning around".
Related idea, you could also figure out where the RF stage stuff is in the radio and de-tune it upward to get more attenuation at 120.6, but if that works, then just some attenuation in the antenna line may work as well and be easier.

3- Put the radio FAR away, but run the audio in some small coax to the 88.1 closer to the visitors.

4- I like the "cross Polarization" idea. Do a light saber thing with the Sony antenna. There may be a sweat spot that just might get the levels down and fix the IM or whatever is going on..

Mike T. Use the airport receiver...

Sounds good, but they probably don't want you messing with it.... and what about the airport's transmissions...

5- HOWEVER, how about simply a microphone right next to this receiver and within earshot of the airport's microphone---ON the 88.1 Tx ?? You may hear other stuff in the FBO, but it may be ok too...

Related... I have a little thing I plug into my dual band rig speaker output and it transmits the audio to my car FM radio. They're made for listening to battery operated CD players in your car.

Dear Cindy,

I do not own the Wellbrook ALA 1530 model; I own the Wellbrook ALA 330S. The difference between the two antennas is basically that the '1530 is optimized for the lower range of frequencies on SW, the MW band, and the LW band while the '330S is particularly good with the upper SW frequencies. (It works fairly well on MW but is relatively insensitive on LW.) It sounds to me as though the '1530 would be best for you, though it would be wise to e-mail or telephone Andy Ikin, Wellbrook's owner, for his personal advice to you, based on your listening habits. (His telephone number is 011 44 1591 620316. Remember the time difference.)

The quality of construction of my '330S is superb; as all Wellbrook antennas are handmade by Mr. Ikin, the '1530 would be made to the same high standard.

It is hard to believe that my '330S is, in fact, an active antenna; it is the quietest antenna I have ever owned. It makes summertime listening (the season most prone to atmospheric and other "natural" noise) as good as wintertime, in my experience. I should expect that the '1530 would perform similarly.

I have my unit mounted atop an inexpensive Radio Shack TV rotator in my attic, where it works extremely well and is, of course, protected from the elements (the antennas are designed to be mounted outside but I must mount mine indoors due to local community requirements). Indoor mounting works extremely well and I should note that, contrary to the recommendations in the instruction sheet, placement is not at all critical. (That is the ONLY contradiction I can make to the excellent instruction sheet; follow its advice TO THE LETTER otherwise - that is VERY important.) Note that while a rotator is not absolutely necessary with the '330S (though it is a great help), it is with the '1530 as that antenna is even more directional than the '330S.

I have had my Wellbrook antenna since March 2004. I am very pleased with it. In over forty years of shortwave listening I have never owned an antenna that performs as well.

I hope the above is of some use to you.

Best,

Joe

From experience I would say you want some sag, if you make it really tight, the rope seemed to fall apart more quickly than if I let it sag a little. Besides, pulling the rope that tight isn't an easy thing to do by yourself...

Also, I was wondering how could I pick up storms that are many miles

I do know I have to enter the country code. But would the antenna pick

I had a typo. I wanted to type "hear". I typed "haer" or something like that and my spell check caught it. In my haste, I allowed it to be corrected to "here" and not "hear". I've had that happen to me many times where I was Synchronous AM detectors can also be ECSS detectors, provided one sideband is suppressed by the receiver, the acronym for which I suggest is SECSS ....

Otherwise they are SECDS(B) - the 'B' is optional, or SDSB, and, for symmetry, an alternative for SECSS could be SSSB.....

The rules should also apply to W1AW who has also caused malicious interference. The problem is W1AW is allowed to interfere with on going transmissions and K1MAN isn't. the rules should apply to all. One final note, rules are only valid until a court says otherwise.

Perhaps its greatest benefit is improved immunity from distortion due to selective fading, especially that which sucks out the carrier. Suppressing one sideband also reduces fading distortion. The Dream software DRM decoder also incorporates a synchronous AM, selectable sideband detector. The improvement in listenability for a DSB AM signal in the presence of selective fading is truly remarkable when it is used in synchronous ECSS mode.

Broadcasters would free spectrum, reduce interference, be more energy efficient, maintain compatability with the huge installed base of AM radios by converting to SSBc mode. Radios manufactured with DSP capable of synchronous AM selectable sideband would probably require less silicon than DRM (read cheaper), be more energy efficient (read eat batteries more slowly), be compatable with the huge installed base of DSBAM transmitters and the then-growing number of SSBc transmitters. Why don't we hear more about this alternative from broadcasters and manufacturers? Have I missed something?

>> b. An analog radio with sync detection would sound better than a DRM >> radio using the same radio spectrum bandwidth.

> Do you actually have a DRM-radio? Can you compair?

While DRM might give the subjective impression of wider frequency response and higher signal-to-noise ratio, to fit within a 10 or 20 kHz bandwidth, it necessarily uses a very low bitrate lossy codec. I find that listening to such codecs is aggravating, moreso than (and very different from) the dynamic changes in spectral balance from an AM transmission in moderate fades.

Moreover, the DRM spectrum is rectangular - even energy distribution. If we take our 10 kHz channel and use SSBc to fill it (carrier at channel edge), we will get nearly 10 kHz audio bandwidth. If we also use pre-emphasis (as is done in FM), or one of the (ancient) Dolby or dBx type noise reduction systems to lift the treble energy in the sideband, we will get a much improved S/N. Still very listenable on a conventional DSBAM radio with typical IF and AF passbands.

Why don't we hear about this approach? It sounds so easy I think I should build a transmitter and experiment with it! There must be a catch...

Maybe at one time, but many radio operators have taken steps to discourage such vandalism, such as running the coax via a path that is difficult to get to without being noticed. Besides, Baxter is probably someone that has video security around his station. Do you really think pinning his coax is something you actually think can feasibly be accomplished?

At 9 o'clock Thursday night, KTRH 740 in Houston is coming in loud and clear on my house radios, the CCRadio and the GE SuperRadio III. The signal's doing a nice job, due West here in San Antonio, about 200

Not really one of the SuperRadio clan as such (lacking the name) but it's the forerunner of all the rest of the line.
I've got a 7-2880B (first edition) in very good condition for sale if anyone's interested. These radios are great on the AM and FM bands. 6 "D" cells to run it or AC with the original cord that came with it. Antenna connections, bass, treble etc. I actually have two but it's time to trim the excess. Have pics of the set. Asking $100 plus shipping. Works and looks great!

How about a grapple hook tied to a good strong truck, thrown quickly to the tower and it yanked down? "Possibly" done rather quickly and easily if one has a good throwing arm. OR how about a laser beam fired from a car on the street - using an AC Inverter for the power?

Seriously though - if someone wanted to "really" take him or his transmitter out - it could be done. No one is safe in this day and age. Hang in there, the FCC will do it..... I've seen them bust others and haul all the equipment away - towers included.

Rather than make up or otherwise abuse definitions, how about keeping the details straight, rather than add to the confusion.

Sync detectors phase lock a locally generated carrier to the signal. The signal and the carrier go to a product detector.

ECSS amplifies the carrier and applies it and the original signal to the product detector. (Hint: look up the definition of exalted.)

Receiving an AM signal in SSB mode is simply that.

The common theme - all use a product detector.

What is "EPG"? If it's another digital stream then you have to able to pick up the signal to get the information and that is a lot of information for a low bit rate signal that can, lets face it, have drop outs.

This tells me that you have never used a radio with sync detection. A sync detector helps with selective fading and a good one will give weak signals a boost. This together with a properly adjusted AGC will give you constant quality audio.

So what that got to do with it. The DRM "sound" sucks with a good signal and analog station with a good signal sounds much better. A DRM signal that was weak would be dropping out and would get turned off.

No I don't. I told you I listened to the samples on the DRM website and besides that there are plenty of examples on the web of low bit rate audio encoded files that don't sound very good.

Yes there are quite a few SW broadcasters and broadcast sites in NA but I spend little time listening to them.

I know what you meant. You are missing my point that this is not the extent of the hype and I strongly disagree that DRM sounds better than analog AM. It clearly sounds worse. You would have to increase the bandwidth DRM currently uses for it to sound better.

And just how do you think analog would sound using the same bandwidth?

So your argument for DRM here is change the technology to overcome a political problem?

Just the opposite. One low bit rate crappie sounding DRM signal wastes three channels. A good sounding DRM signal would waste twice as many.

Actually besides sounding like crap DRM biggest problem is that broadcasters can start controlling who can listen. DRM would also be easier to jam. Small wonder China would go for it.

No they are a digital mode that interferes with the analog signals I want to listen too. They should stick to the part of the spectrum for digital mode signals.

Why should a digital mode signal be sitting in the middle of a analog AM broadcast band?

> If these broadcasts are analog or digital are IMHO of no importance.

I don't know why you would say this. Usage and mode of transmission determine what frequency you transmit on. Why should DRM be an exception?

Yeah, cheerio to you too.

Radio gets it's name from 'radiating'. When Marie Curie was experminting with a new element uranium in the late 1800's, she coined the term
'radioactivity' because it radiated 'rays'.

Foaming the runway would have only made it slick and harder to control the plane. You foam the runway when a plane has to land with the gear up.

It's historical. Great Britain (the big UK island; England, Wales and Scotland but not Ireland) was warred over by various different European tribes for several thousand years before the arrival of the Normans (French) in 1066AD which pacified England (England had been previously pacified by the Romans from around 50-400AD but the Romans withdrew to southern Europe to defend their empire against the Turks and Vandals from around 300AD). The native UK tribes (such as mine, the Britons, and others such as the Celts, Danes or Angles) were pushed back into Wales and Scotland. England is relatively flat and easy to push armies across; Wales and Scotland are very, very hilly and difficult to march over.

In short, warlike behaviour was beneficial for natives' survival.

The whole of the UK also suffers from raging alcoholism and alcohol-fuelled violence which is seen as socially acceptable. Again, this is a throwback to tribal culture where drinking to excess was seen as a strength. From an evolutionary standpoint, high alcohol consumption was advantageous in tribal warfare since it allows the drinker to fight on through pain. This became less of an advantage when warfare switched from tribal raids to organised armies; it's useful to fight drunk when in a tribal raid and hand-to-hand combat, it's not useful to fight drunk when trying to stick in formation, ride horses or fire arrows at a target.

It should be noted that the Scots tribes continued to kick the French/English arses well into the 1600s. Hand-to-hand fighting in drunken unpredictable rabbles remained a very successful tactic in hilly areas, until the widespread use of firearms meant that drunken raiders could be picked off from a safe distance.

Much the same tribal drink/violence culture was also seen in Scandinavia (Viking) and German countries.

All in all, probably a good idea we insist Brits have a background check before getting a firearms licence.

As for Northern Ireland, this is something that as a Brit I tend to avoid commenting on, since we've already cocked it up enough.

Online Scams Target Katrina Donations

Since the day Katrina devastated the Gulf Coast, the FBI reports more than 2,300 Web sites have popped up asking for donations for victims. The magnitude of the disaster has made the Internet a perfect place for crooks to exploit both compassion and convenience, the Both Missouri and Florida have filed lawsuits against fraudulent Web sites, but, so far, Texas has not. Parsons said that it is because the Texas Attorney General is watching for more imminent scams since the Lone Star State is handling the ripple effects of the disaster.

"They're watching for the 'I'm a FEMA inspector, here I am,' as opposed to some cyber-crook in Thailand running a bad Web site," Parsons said. The biggest hurdle for consumers weeding out the fraudulent sites from the legitimate ones is so many of the sites are made to look like bona fide charities such as the Red Cross, Salvation Army and United Way.

Yes, they are an unimpeachable source of accurate news. So is the Voice of Korea, and Al Jazeera. That's why we must jam them. We only want white Americans to see a picture that makes the idiots believe that we are perfect and everyone else is a terrorist.

We don't want them telling the world about our plans to murder everyone who isn't white!

This planet was created for white men, and everyone else has to die.

Of course we will keep their finest women to be slaves and breed more slave children.

Did you all see how Phil Donahue made a complete idiot of my idol Billy O'Reilly last night on his Fox show.

Bill hands were trembling so much that I thought he was going to have a stroke. He looked like a total fool when this Phil Donahue guy finished telling him how crazy his notions about Iraq were.

White people are GODS chosen people. Jesus is white, the angels are white. America will take over the world and bring our form of democracy to the sub humans in Europe and Asia.

So saith the Bible.

Actually, the original carrier is disregarded, as its selective fading is what causes the distortion in the first place. In a product detector the carrier is generated in the receiver, is it not?

If the receiver carrier and the transmitter carrier are both present in the detector intermod products are produced; anything from motorboating to a whine.

Over three years ago,I heard on a local Jackson radio talk show (or maybe it was on Roger Fredinburg's radio talk show www.regularguy.com out of Medford,Oregon where I heard that) that Michael Savage doesn't like Mississippi.However,when bad weather down South is threating,a lot of folks from South Mississippi and Louisiana are cutting a trail to parts further North in Mississippi,it happens all the time.Oh well,Mississippi is always here to help the refuges.Roger Fredinburg (I don't know if any of y'all listen to Roger's radio talk show or not) used to say Mississippi has the prettiest gals in the World.(email him and ask him if you want to and tell him I says [[Larry is I]] he doesn't love me any more because he won't reply to any of my emails to him anymore) How would he know? he has never even been to Mississippi before.Back in the 1950's,Mary Ann Moberly won the Miss America contest/pagent two years in a row.

I beg to differ - after going to school in Texas two years, and having lived more than 20 years each in Massachusetts and California, I'd bet $10,000 on Texas to win, place and show - I never have been to another place where every woman makes you drool buckets. They are goddesses. That's where I met my wife, although interestingly, she's a California girl.

On topic, my favorite radio shows have always been on SW - but my faves aren't there anymore. His and Hers on RN, Keith Glover's show on RA, and Gursky and Henderson on RCI Sunday mornings - gone forever. Not much personality left, it seems.

Sorry, got my tribes confused there. It was the Goths, not the Turks.
The Turks were involved in the fall of the Roman Eastern Empire (Byzantium and Constantinople/Istanbul) in the 1400s; it was the Goths who spearheaded the fall of the Roman Western Empire in the late 300s.

>The native UK tribes (such as mine, the Britons, and others such >as the Celts, Danes or Angles)

And by "native" I mean "nearer than Rome". The Danes and Angles were relative newcommers when compared to the Britons and Celts. The Angles arrived around 200BC in the form of the Belgae, got knocked into shape when the Romans arrived and popped up again as the Anglo-Saxons in the 400s; the Danes (Vikings/Norse) followed in the late 500s.

Whereas us Britons had been there for thousands of years (pretty much since the end of the ice age around 10,000BC), the Celts since about 900-500BC (the Celts probably arrived from Spain). Anything beyond 500BC is a bit difficult to trace, though. Us Britions were still shagging sheep and worshiping the Sun whilst the Egyptians were working out the value of Pi, so it wasn't like we were clever enough to write anything down.

George H. W. Bush, Jimmy Carter, and Gerald Ford failed in their re-election bids. "Richard Nixon spent most of 1974 in the 20s, hitting 24 percent just before his resignation." (Yep) Lyndon Johnson refused to run for a second term. Ronald Reagan - must have been saved by Nancy and her astrologer.
Bill Clinton was able to come back because he had charisma and nice hair.

Average for a 2010 on Ebay is about $350 for used no box and $500 for new / mint boxed. Considering they sold new for $350-$400 and haven't been produced in a few years... those prices aren't that bad.

I see 2010s all the time at large hamfests in the $150 to $200 range. One seller at a hamfest earlier this year had a mint 2010 in the box with all paperwork for $150. Still kick myself for not jumping on it.

I heard the following on a recent DXpedition on MediumWave 1520 Khz, 0456 UTC with ID "Asian Radio fifteen twenty"
I have had various opinions on this.
One said it could be "WTRI", Brunswick, MD.
as they sometime carried Korean programming.
but WTRI is supposed to be "daytime " only, and the time would be about 00.30 A.m. summer time around Washington, DC.
Also others claim WTRI are now doing "Vegas" format.
Yet other suggestions were:
KYND, Cypress, TX.
Anybody got any ideas on IDing this??

Once a radio has tuned to a stream and received one valid "SI" frame, it has all the information about all possible frequencies the broadcaster uses. The set will store that information so that -the next time you switch your set to a certain program- the radio knows what frequencies to look at.

If you write something sex-neutral, why use "he"? Half of the population is female.

The EPG ('Electronic Program Guide') can be broadcaste as a seperate audio-stream (as usually is done on DAB) but can also be broadcasted as a PAD-stream (PAD = Program Associated Data)

PAD data in inserted into the few spare bits at the end of each audio-packet which are not used (because of the way the MPEG-format encoding is done, you cannot really fillup the frames upto the last byte).

>>Second, the only thing the radio will do is scan all frequencies it can >>receive and compose a list based on that. That's how DAB radios work >>nowdays too.

> I can do that right now so who needs DRM?

Sure, but AM does not provide an identification of the stations. This means that DRM can provide a list of station-names (and not just frequencies) and remove the doubles from it.

And because of the AF-information, a DRM-set will still be able to tune to a station in that list, even it has already switched to a different frequency.

The EPG-information inside the stream will then also tell you what program you are listing to, what it is about and when the next programs starts and what that will be about.

True, but at that time analog reception will be impossible too.

So, the question is how bad does your signal have to get to result in drop-outs and would an analog signal still be acceptable at that point.

Anycase, as I already said in my message-thread with Frank, DRM allows for a number techniques which can be used to reduce the fading on shortwave which are impossible or much more difficult on analog broadcasting.

It was a hitachi KGWS1 (a combined SW/worldspace radio).

How much radio-sets do have this functionality?

Concider somebody who just buys a SW-radio to listen to the daily news from home when you're on holiday in one of the costa's, how many of this kind of radio-statons have this?

Not a lot I would say, or else all SW-broadcasters would have switched to SSB.

>>>2. Audio quality.

OK. Let's take the examples on the DRM-website. They had bad audio-quality and good DRM-quality.
(but that's what you would expect on DRM, wouldn't you? :-)))

To make an honest comparison, you should make a comparison between a live DRM-broadcast and the same content, on a "average" SW-radio (hence, no SSB, no sync-detection, ...) as that is the equipement people who are targeted by this technology.

This is something that we can do ourselfs once DRM-receivers are widely available and not be dependent on audio-samples of websites of other people.

>>>... but I find that MW and SW are quite acceptable.
>>Are there domestic SW-broadcasts in the NA? CBC/RC?

OK, but do they target a NA-audience?
I guess there's RCI who's targetting the US and visa-versa. But does CBC/RC use shortwave for their domestic service?

>>>>(The term "near-FM" is marketing talk, just ignore it).

Wait, are you telling me that a good DRM-signal in 10 Khz sounds (e.g. in stereo) sounds worse then the same signal in AM?

Do you have audio-samples to support this claim?

>>If you listen to a very-low bitrate auxilairy channel (e.g. one used for >>broadcasting traffic-messages) it will sound much worse then FM.
>>If you use it in the 20 KHz mode in the 11 meter broadcasting-band, it

> And just how do you think analog would sound using the same bandwidth?

I don't know. It would be nice to test.

However, the main reason why broadcasters are interested in 20 Khz DRM is a path for the digitalisation of the local radio-stations now on FM.

DRM is partically interesting as it allows for SFNs and a mini-SFN by 2 or 3 transmittors around the city allows you to lower the total transmission-power quite dramastically.

It's not "my" argument. I'm just saying that RTL plan to use DRM for that reason.

Euh. These stations run in the same 9 Khz bandplan as all other
MW-broadcasts. (this is DRM, not IBOC-AM, remember?)

Well, to be honest, I don't like this neither but I do think it will be one of the elements that drive DRM worldwide; "political correct" or not.

Like sets which can only tune to certain frequencies, DRM -like any other digital technology- does allow for receiver which can only tune to certain stations (like the Chinese state broadcasters), and block tuning to other transmissions.

But the net result will that there is a market for over half a billion people for new radios (if we would say that this kind of services is limited to that half of the Chinese population who lives in urban areas); and -therefor- allow for the chinese chipset manufacters to swamp the rest of the world with very cheap receivers.

I do think this can have a very big impact with the advance of DRM into certain areas (like Africa) which could be very possitive for the use of radio as a educational tool.

Who says that you will not be interested in the stations being broadcasted in DRM?

Perhaps, as DRM is cheaper to broadcast then AM, you will find more "interesting" stations on DRM then on AM. (instead of the well-known rich broadcasters now on shortwave).

> ... They should stick to the part of the spectrum for > digital mode signals.

AFAIK, the spectrum-allocation is based on principles of "compatibility".

Putting a x-hunderd KW broadcasting-station (analog or digtal) in the band with utility-stations will produce much more interference than when it is put in a broadcastind-band "competing" with other high-power broadcasting-stations.

>>What does a x. KW high-power general-public broadcasting-station do in >>the same band as medium-power utility-broadcasts?

> Why should a digital mode signal be sitting in the middle of a analog AM > broadcast band?

Because it is a broadcasting-application.

The other bands (ham, aeronautical, maritime, defence, gouverement, ...)
all have a mix of digital and analog broadcasts and that does not seams to be a problem overthere.

Sofar, the broadcasting-band has sofar been the only piece where there hasn't been any digital transmissions, but it looks like that time will end soon.

>>If these broadcasts are analog or digital are IMHO of no importance.
> I don't know why you would say this. Usage and mode of transmission

Correct!

And that's why all broadcasting-applications (which need high power as they are directed to low-gain receivers) must be grouped together in one band: the broadcasting-bands.

Well, my impression is that DRM is essentally stillborn. It's inspired by the dream of making SW reception and audio sound just like FM. However, it's not quite as good as FM on either count and it's a bandwidth hog....oh, and there's that pesky problem of drop outs, which is ultimately far more objectionable than fading. So, DRM is this exciting new addition to the scene--that's not really quite as good as either regular shortwave or FM in any of the respects that count.

I think the question is whether DRM even deserves a proper burial.

Nothing you could hang a QSL card on, but WWKB in Buffalo, NY and KOMA in Oklahoma City, OK are both 50,000W around-the-clock stations, and both are markets big enough to have a Korean-based show (even if on Concidering the fact that DRM will be used for MW/LW, local broadcasts in the 11 meter, long-distance broadcasting on SW and possible also in band I or band II; you'll have a difficult job buring it. :-) Just interested. Does anybody know if the AM-decoding in a "normal price" SW-receiver is done in hardware or in software (ASIC/DSP)?

I might have missed something but AFAIK you cannot decode SSBc with a standard AM-radio, can you?

DRM has two advantages of this:
- it's a digital system. This means it includes features like auxilairy content, "Alternative frequency" information, station identification, multiple streams (e.g. two audio-streams in one DRM transport-stream), variable bandwidth from 4.5 to 20 Khz, variable modulation-sceme and error-correction mechanism based on channel quality, easier support for time- and frequency diversity, single-frequency networking.

It's easier to integrate into combined DAB/DRM chipsets which allows for an one "integrated" chipset for both systems. It also allows cross-platform services; e.g. does the "AF"-service work between DAB, DRM and FM/RDS.

- it's one technology for LW/MW, for SW, for 11 meter "local" broadcasting and, with the extension of DRM+, for band I and band II.

This creates an enormous market for this, and -therefor- cheaper chipsets.

- And it allows you to lower the transmission-power (and hence the electrivity-bill).

Interest idea. Just interested to know how 10 Khz SSBc would react to selective fading. As you said in the beginning, the problem is when the carrier is gone. Wouldn't you have the same problem as with a DSBAM-receiver?

BTW. AFAIK (correct me if I am wrong) a DSBAM-decoder will completely chocke on such a signal, so I kind-of miss the reason why you say this is compatible with a convensional DSBAM-radio.

> Why don't we hear about this approach? It sounds so easy I think I should

Well, how would such a system react in a situation of two half co-channel stations. (i.e. one station at 9.900 - 9.910 Khz, and another channel at 9.905 - 9.915 Khz).

(What is the exact jargon-word for this? co-channel? semi co-channel?)

True. When I was at school, we once visited "Oostende radio" (the maritime radio-station here in Belgium). I was surprised at some of the things these people manufactered completely by themself.

Does where the times when "operators" still designed and manufactored things themself. A telco nowdays is just a "user", that's all.

It depends on how you "fit" it into the specs.

Transmitting a time-shifted signal at two different frequencies will work as it doesn't break the specs. As does twice the same signal inside one DRM transport-stream (as long as they do not have the same stream-id).

If you then add the "stream 101 is a time-shifted version of stream 102" information in the SI (System Information) part, a new receiver can use this information to do time- and frequency-diversity reception.
An "old" receiver will not know how to interprete this information in the SI-header and just ignore it. He will just see it as two different streams.

Well, that's the remark I wanted to make.

The advantage of DRM is that is specification which works in a different number of enviroments with a number of very different "markets" and "applications".
This creates a very large market for DRM-chipsets and -even it is not a success in the beginning in one market- a possible success in other applications will drive the demand for chips which will drive down the price.

BTW. Something I forgot to mention the last time.

A couple of months ago, there was a rapport on RNZI about how they think of using DRM in the pacific ocean region.

Overthere, there are a number of nations which just concist of a large number of islands with somewhere between some hunderd to some thousand people on every one of them. Some states concist of almost 100 islands.

As these islands are to far appart to be served by one single transmittor, they use local FM and AM-relay on individual islands to do broadcasting.

DRM would have two advantages for them:
- Using DRM in the 18 Khz MW-mode, would allow them to broadcast a "FM-quality grade" signal from the main island to the other islands, without the need of use of satellites.

As DRM is digital, you can also "daisychain" transmittors and retransmit the "feeder" signal (i.e. the DRM-signal) from one island to another without loss of quality.
DRM over MW would then be the "backbone" transport-layer to get your signal from the main island to the outmost islands.

However, the rebroadcasting of your program to the general public will be in analog FM or AM, so that people can continue to use their old radio-set for the next 10 years or so.

- DRM uses half the broadcasting-power of AM, which is a major advantage for these islands as most of them are dependend on generators (running on oil which has to be imported and transported all the way up the most remote islands) to power their transmittors!

That's one of the advantages of international broadcasting (althou I downloaded this via the internet). It's always interesting to find out how people live on the other side of the world and see that things we find "normal" are not that "normal" overthere. :-)

However...

...the only other thing that can be said in defense of W1AW is that it is a national organization representing tens of thousands of hams that is presumably "broadcasting" for the common good (and follows a regular, published schedule, allowing others to dodge the "interference" if they so wish), while K1MAN is a --single--private--individual-- who has had some peculiar (shady ?) pecuniary interests associated with his

The Hurricane Watch Net is on 14325, but not currently active.

The Net will activate tomorrow morning (September 24) at 1300 on 14325.

I'm currently listening to WWL 870, which had some technical difficulties a few minutes ago.

I'm not aware of any radios at any price that do AM decoding by DSP. I suspect they exist in some form - after all, that is what one would expect from Software Defined Radio technology. What about these new DRM radios - do they also do AM and FM demodulation via DSP?

> I might have missed something but AFAIK you cannot decode SSBc with a > standard AM-radio, can you?

Yes. I might have the acronym wrong - I mean SSB with reduced carrier, not suppressed. The Canadian time signal transmissions from CHU on 3330 and 7335 kHz use this mode - easily received on the cheapest SW radios.

I'm aware of this but it's incompatible with the huge installed base..... I'm not sure about your "easier support for" statement - it's true for time diversity but I can't quite imagine how and why one would need this for an analog transmission mode so it seems a specious point. Frequency diversity and SFN is done with AM. One's sense of hearing does a wonderful job of "error correction" as part of an analog system - the digital system can't work without its own. Seems like many of the purported advantages are born out of necessity.

Auxiliary content, AF, station ID's, multiple streams and various bandwidths and bitrates in DAB surely did not excite the public in this country. Now, satellite radio with terrestrial fill-ins may be a different matter, and cable and satellite DTH audio services with images and text certainly are. The takeup has been pretty good.

> It's easier to integrate into combined DAB/DRM chipsets which allows for > and FM/RDS.

This may be of interest in those markets that Eureka 147 DAB was adopted with fair market success (where is that other than the UK?) and maybe where FM/RDS is likewise deployed but both require that the broadcaster has multiple transmitters carrying the same program in multiple modes for the listener to realize the benefit of cross-platform AF service. This may be more theoretical than practical. The time delay for lockup to DRM or DAB is so large that AF service using either of them would require dual receivers so that the alternate frequency is already tuned and locked before the current frequency goes unlocked, rather than blindly chasing the AF list.

My observations of DRM on shortwave has been that high transmitter power is still needed - maybe less than for DSBAM. SSBc also saves power.

When selective fade knocks out the carrier, you lose lock but not the modulation, with a "true" synchronous AM detector. There will be an error distortion, as in asynchronous ECSS, which could be very small for some considerable time. DRM is not immune to selective fading - the cause is multipath which causes jitter or spreading of the digital stream and when it is big enough - no decoding and then wait for re-lock after the jitter has fallen below the acceptable threshold.

An envelope detector will demodulate as long as there is carrier. There is increasing distortion as the carrier is reduced relative to sideband below some level. There would have to be a tradeoff between power savings and receiver distortion.

With DSP IF brickwall filtering as in the Dream and SDRadio softwares, I think it should work very well indeed by setting the filter to less than 5kHz - for the lower of the pair if we assume USB mode for both. The higher would experience crosstalk from the first for program content whose audio spectrum extends well above 5 kHz. Conventional AM radios could also be tuned to minimise interference from the adjacent channel.

How does DRM react to overlapping spectrum from an adjacent or co-DRM? Not likely very well given its poor performance in the presence of DSBAM or SSB overlapping its spectrum. DRM SFN's may be another matter but jitter due to path differences will cause problems somewhere - maybe synchronous SSBc transmitters could form equally effective SFN's that work with the huge installed base....

Cheers, Kristoffe. You lead a good discussion.

< Snip >

You are not taking my message the first or last time. You just want to argue non points.

Here is the message, DRM has no real advantage over analog as implemented.

Saying that "if" this or that was changed then it would be better makes no difference because it does not exist.

Saying that DRM can have all its benefits and advantages but that you must compare it to an analog radio without features like sync detection is just stacking the deck in favor of your non argument.

On air broadcast of time and frequency information on a really low bit rate channel in poor conditions will not work at all so when you need it the most it won't work.

If you don't want to, and it's clear that you don't, want to discuss this factually then that's your problem to deal with.

> Wait, are you telling me that a good DRM-signal in 10 Khz sounds (e.g. > in stereo) sounds worse then the same signal in AM?

Yeah, I'm telling you that DRM in 10 KHz the sound quality sucks.

> Do you have audio-samples to support this claim?

Yes, on the DRM web site. They have example of strong and weak signal DRM reception and compare it to analog. I've written this for the third and last time. Here is another thing I'm writing for the last time and that's low bit rate audio sound sucks whether the source is a DRM broadcast, streamed from the Internet or a recording.

Digital signals don't belong in the analog AM broadcast band where they occupy at least three channels. I don't want them there and most people don't want those transmission there either.

Your desire to be a sucker for DRM is a personal problem as I see it.

Is this for real or is it some kind of weird joke? I wish I'd heard the whole commentary because I didn't hear Green say why he was leaving R. Netherlands. Or maybe he stepped over the line in one of his commentaries and was asked to leave? Does anyone know?

john mccain ran for prez of U.S.A.a few years ago.U.S.Constitution says any prezes of U.S.A.must be born in U.S.A.There are fifty states in U.S.A.and john mccain (he waen't much of a U.S.Navy Jet Airplane Pilot either,from things I have read about him before,he crashed two of those Airplanes and g.h.w.bush's U.S.Navy Airplane escapade is circumspect too) was born in the Panama Canal Zone.He can never, according to the Constitution of the United States of America be a prez of U.S.A.

Thats a really good history lesson from Andrew Oakley but Im not really to up to date on all that stuff,but what I will say is that we have a few problems particularly in the west of Scotland and unfortunately to our shame it is the old religion chestnut.Sectarianism and bigotry between Prodestants and Catholics.(throw in football and alchohol and drugs,particularly when Rangers -Celtic play each other and the accident emergency depts of our hospitals look like abbatoirs)Guns here are not the weapon of choice, here it is the Knife,machette or stanley blade that most criminals (neds) use.Like the U.S. OF A merica we too have a deep divide between the haves and have nots and this also contributes to a lot of violence mostly by people who are out of their faces on heroin and stuff and see no way out of the problems of debt and poverty.
Its not all doom and gloom, ask anyone who has visited Scotland and they will have had a wonderful time and will always come back due to our hospitality and welcoming nature.We are a work hard, play hard nation and as you all know we like our drink(have a malt whisky on me,but its no ma round,lol aye a forgot to mention we are as tight as a ducks arse and dont like spendin money heehee) and are always optimistic whatever problems we encounter.I hope this does not sound like a tourist info advertisment but I feel it is unfair that we are regarded as a nation of cavemen,anyway ill need to go and wash ma kilt, ahm goin up the toon the night fur a swally an you never know,I might get a burd.

JD,
To validate your point about the Democrat's now being controlled by the Liberal Special Interest Groups and Left-Wing Extremists - Look at the recent Vote by the Senate Judiciary Committee.
Five of the Democrats voted against Chief Justice nominee John G.
Roberts Jr.
Only three of the Democrats had the Courage to stand-up to the Liberal Special Interest Groups and Left-Wing Extremists and vote as Americans First vice Democrat Political Cadre.
http://www.washingtonpost.com/wp-dyn/content/article/2005/09/22/AR2005092200796.html

Contrast that with the Republicans who reported Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg out of the committee Unanimously and then gave Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg a Senate Voted of 96 to 4 to confirm her.
http://www.nationalreview.com/comment/hatch200509130809.asp
NOTE - Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg was General Counsel (Head Lawyer) of the ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) which is one of the most extreme Liberal Legal Organizations in the USA; if not the World.
http://www.townhall.com/columnists/robertnovak/rn20050725.shtml
Now Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg has come-out publicly to state her {Political} Opinion on just what 'type' of Women should be nominated to the US Supreme Court.
http://www.law.com/jsp/article.jsp?id=1127379918762&rss=newswire
This is the same Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg, who now advocates putting International Law above the US Constitution.
It is now expected that Chief Justice nominee John G. Roberts Jr. may only get about 60 Votes from the US Senate for Confirmation. With about 80% of the Democrats yielding to the Pressure of the Liberal Special Interest Groups and Left-Wing Extremists and Voting NO !

4769. How Long Should My "Slinky" Dipole Antenna BE ? - - - How Many Slinkys You Got ?

For One and All,
How Long Should My Slinky Antenna BE ?
- - - How Many Slinkys You Got ?
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5411
The standard Full Size Slinky has about 100 Turns with a Diameter of 2 3/4 Inches and a Circumference of 8.64 Inches for a Total Wire Length of 72 Feet.
So the Optimum* "Stretched-Out" Length of a Slinky would be about 22.9 Feet. * Note - Based on the "Spacing" of the Coil being 'equal' to the Diameter of the Coil.
SIZING THE SLINKY DIPOLE ANTENNA :
A Two (2) Slinky Dipole (1 Slinky per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 45.8 Feet Tip-to-Tip; and that would be Resonant about 10.6 MHz. Rig the Dipole Antenna at about 23 Feet above Ground.
A Three (3) Slinky Dipole (1.5 Slinkys per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 68.7 Feet Tip-to-Tip and that would be Resonant about 7 MHz. Rig the Dipole Antenna at about 34 Feet above Ground.
A Four (4) Slinky Dipole (2 Slinkys per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 91.6 Feet Tip-to-Tip; and that would be Resonant about 5.3 MHz. Rig the Dipole Antenna at about 46 Feet above Ground.
A Six (6) Slinky Dipole (3 Slinkys per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 137.4 Feet Tip-to-Tip; and that would be Resonant about 3.5 MHz. Rig the Dipole Antenna at about 69 Feet above Ground.

My Thoughts of the Windom "Slinky" Antenna :
So from the start, with a Windom Antenna made of Slinkys it should be clear that there are going to be more Slinkys on one Side of this Antenna then the other Side.
Basics - The standard Full Size Slinky has about 100 Turns with a Diameter of 2 3/4 Inches and a Circumference of 8.64 Inches for a Total Wire Length of 72 Feet.
How Long Does It Get ? - I Calculate that the Optimum*
"Stretched-Out" Length of a Slinky would be about 22.9 Feet.
* Note - Based on the "Spacing" of the Coil being 'equal' to the Diameter of the Coil.
SIZING THE WINDOM "SLINKY" ANTENNA :
The Three (3) Slinky Windom - {Something To Try}
- Short Side One (1) Slinky (22.9*2) Resonant about 10.6 MHz + Long Side Two (2) Slinkys (22.9*4) Resonant about 5.3 MHz
= Tip-to-Tip would be 68.7 Feet and Resonant about 7 MHz
* Rig this Antenna at 22.9 Feet above Ground Level.
The Five (5) Slinky Windom - {It's Got To Be Bigger}
- Short Side Two (2) Slinkys (22.9*4) Resonant about 5.3 MHz + Long Side Three (3) Slinkys (22.9*6) Resonant about 3.5 MHz
= Tip-to-Tip would be 114.5 Feet and Resonant about 4.2 MHz
* Rig this Antenna at 45.8 Feet above Ground Level.
TIP - Use a 4:1 Matching Transfromer (Balun) and a Coax Cable Feed-in-Line with your Windom "Slinky" Antenna for Shortwave Listening use.

He's hit 65 and they're retiring him. This has been an on and off subject of his for the past 6 weeks or so.

The Dutch are pretty anal about this. One of the regulars in sci.electronics.design got the same treatment. With their good benefits system and high unemployment, you hit the age limit and

I merely pointed out that Bush isn't enjoying the popular support that he used to. I do rely on the polls for that information. But, if his low esteem continues, it could affect how quickly the pendulum swings back towards the left in future elections.

It's an easy exercise to make a "moonbat" list of Dems, Republicans, centrists, wackos, etc.

One thing's for sure, the next presidential election will be interesting, with no clear choice yet for either side. I'm not a Hillary fan, but I would almost like to see her run just to watch the veins pop in the necks of the conservative pundits!

My "best bet"? I go to work, pay my taxes, vote my conscience (I have actually voted for Republicans on the local level) and enjoy life with my family and my NRD-525. Life is good where I am, despite the lightning, tornadoes, hurricanes, droughts, floods, alligators, snakes, West Nile virus, walking catfish, red tide, mercuric fish, and melanoma. But whose counting?

Leftism is a religion. That's why the leftist sheeple follow the high priests with such religious fervor. It also explains why they need so badly to remove the Christian God (competing religion, false prophets, y'see). The only thing I can't figure out is what they think the punishment is for disbelievers, since they can't believe in hell because that's another item from competing religions.

4807. What About the G5RV 'type' Dipole Antenna made of Slinkys ?

For One and All,
What About the G5RV 'type' Dipole Antenna made of Slinkys ?
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5413
http://www.qsl.net/aa3px/g5rv.htm http://www.cebik.com/wire/g5rv.html http://www.wb0w.com/g5rv/g5rv_antennas.htm
http://www.roadkill.com/~unwin/G5RV.html
http://www.packetradio.com/g5rv.htm
First the G5RV is a Center Fed 'Dipole' type Antenna :
Where one Side is 'equal' to the other Side !
What makes the G5RV Antenna 'unique' from the Dipole is the Dual Section Feed-Line composed of a 300 Ohm Twin Lead or 450 Ohm Ladder Line Matching Section 'connected' to a Coax Cable main Feed-in-Line.
To put it simply a G5RV Antenna made of Slinkys will have an Equal Number of Slinkys on both Sides.
Basics - The standard Full Size Slinky has about 100 Turns with a Diameter of 2 3/4 Inches and a Circumference of 8.64 Inches for a Total Wire Length of 72 Feet.
How Long Does It Get ? - I Calculate that the Optimum*
"Stretched-Out" Length of a Slinky would be about 22.9 Feet.
* Note - Based on the "Spacing" of the Coil being 'equal' to the Diameter of the Coil.
SIZING THE G5RV "SLINKY" ANTENNA :
A Two (2) Slinky G5RV Antenna (1 Slinky per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 45.8 Feet Tip-to-Tip. The 300 Ohm Twin Lead would be 15 Feet long and the Antenna Rigged at 23 Feet.
A Three (3) Slinky G5RV Antenna (1.5 Slinkys per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 68.7 Feet Tip-to-Tip. The 300 Ohm Twin Lead would be 23 Feet long and the Antenna Rigged at 34 Feet.
A Four (4) Slinky G5RV Antenna (2 Slinkys per Arm of the Dipole) would be about 91.6 Feet Tip-to-Tip. The 300 Ohm Twin Lead would be 30 Feet long and the Antenna Rigged at 46 Feet.

Feed-in-Line - The 300 Ohm Twin Lead to Coax Cable Hook-Up can be a direct Wire-to-Wire Connection.
TIP - Use a 1:1 or 4:1 Matching Transfromer (Balun) between the Twin Lead and the Coax Cable Feed-in-Line with your G5RV Antenna for Shortwave Listening use.

I don't see any politician cozying up with Sheehan. And I don't recall any cozying up to Moore. Dean may come across as an extremist, but he's just a Democratic pit bull just like the republicans have theirs.

I made mine a Windom dipole, with one slinky on one side and two on the other, stretched out on a 3/8" nylon rope one end on my TV tower at 40' and the other end hooked to a eyebolt drilled into a plug that went into a 90 degree elbow at the end of 20' of 2" (I think that's the size) PVC pipe that had the end stuck into about 60 pounds of concrete and also strapped to my fence. It works great, cushions the shocks from wind and cost about 25 for the whole deal. That PVC pipe is still there after 20 years, holding a conventional longwire antenna that I put up when the slinky finally gave out..

That Slinky Windom had huge signal strength! Cheap radios went to pieces when hooked up to it. But my NRD-515 in the winter was awesome..

I cannot, but helluva catch if that was it from the DC area!
You're talking about a station that was broadcasting at 3,000 watts tops. What kind of antenna configuration were you using on this DXpedition? A 3k station from a distance of 1200+ miles is my idea of a great MW catch, anyhow.

I would be my thinking that for an Amateur the Skinky 'Dipole'
Antenna would be the Ham Antenna of Choice to Work-the-Bands.
However, for the Shortwave Listener to Listen-to-All-Frequencies the Slinky "Windom" Antenna would be the SWL Antenna of Choice.

Tony, we regularly get very low power stations.
It's all about LOCATION, LOCATION, LOCATION.
For more background and info on the Seefontein DX site have a look at:
http://www.dxing.info/dxpeditions/seefontein_2005_07.pdf

My best lowest power catch were:
WKKP, McDonough, GA. on a 58 watt nightime power also WRMQ, Orlando, Fl with 245 watt nightime power

The details of the last DXpedition were:

SEEFONTEIN3 - 13th to 15th September 2005

"Official" sunrise at Seefontein was 0448 and sunset 1637 Seefontein position S32 deg 39 min 6.7 sec, E18 deg 15 min 59.7 sec Propagation average : Solar flux 115, sunspot 90, A index 35, (Tks to Jan Alvestad's website)
(Seefontein2 in July was: Solar flux 85, sunspot 23, A index 15)
Antennas:
1000ft/300m beverage pointed to Australia and "over the shoulder" to central U.S.A.

The propagation indices are much higher than Seefontein2, perhaps that is why conditions this trip were not as good as in July.
As usual there were masses of Brazilians, Arabic and Africans around, but I did not log any of these.
I tried very hard for some Spanish Argentinean and Venezuelan stations, but nara one = strange.
The only Spanish I got was R. Marti, Florida, and considering that it is nearly double the distance from Argentina it is surprising that we hardly get anything from there, yet Brazil, right next door booms in with a full house of stations. Radio is weird, perhaps why our love of DXing. Always something new and unexpected.

I was quite bucked to hear St. Helena again, as it is some years since I last got it. Also liked the little BBC Asian network station from the British midlands and the one kilowatt nightime powered station from Dry Branch, GA (12,900k/8,000 miles away).

The Kiwa MW Loop performed very well as usual, although it doesn't like the auto battery when the voltage gets down to 12 or below. It did particularly well on the low powered European stations which were not even heard on the beverage.

I am also most impressed with the huge dawn/sunrise and sunset enhancement at Seefontein. It seems so much more powerful and to last much longer than any other DX location I have ever been to. Gary Deacon remarked on that at our Seefontein2 visit in July. First light appears at 0420 utc and many good catches were caught around this time. At my home QTH I am used to everything fading out before first light.

We all seem to use quite different methods of DXing around, so here's mine:
I set the tuning step rate for either 9 Khz for the America's or 10 kHz for Europe/Australasia/Asia.
Then in SSB with a filter of 2.9 Khz I zap up and down the band looking for the "sweet plum's"
When I find a good one, then I toggle upper/lower sideband to see which is the best.
If it's not too good, then I will also try AM and fiddle with the filter settings and sidebands until I optimise the audibility.
Then take a recording on my MD.
It may not seem like it, but the band is pretty crowded with 9/10 khz splits, with masses of African/Arabic and European stations trying to blot out those from the America's, so I hardly ever find the AM mode is suitable because of this, and nearly all the logs are in SSB mode.

I tried hard to identify the UNID via websearches - 1520 I can't find any match for a nightime Asian station

BUSH'S BOOZE CRISIS

By JENNIFER LUCE and DON GENTILE

Faced with the biggest crisis of his political life, President Bush has hit the bottle again, The National Enquirer can reveal.

Bush, who said he quit drinking the morning after his 40th birthday, has started boozing amid the Katrina catastrophe.

Family sources have told how the 59-year-old president was caught by First Lady Laura downing a shot of booze at their family ranch in Crawford, Texas, when he learned of the hurricane disaster.

His worried wife yelled at him: "Stop, George."

Following the shocking incident, disclosed here for the first time, Laura privately warned her husband against "falling off the wagon" and vowed to travel with him more often so that she can keep an eye on Dubya, the sources add.

"When the levees broke in New Orleans, it apparently made him reach for a shot," said one insider. "He poured himself a Texas-sized shot of straight whiskey and tossed it back.
The First Lady was shocked and shouted: "Stop George!"

"Laura gave him an ultimatum before, 'It's Jim Beam or me.' She doesn't want to replay that nightmare - especially now when it's such tough going for her husband."

Bush is under the worst pressure of his two terms in office and his popularity is near an all-time low. The handling of the Katrina crisis and troop losses in Iraq have fueled public discontent and pushed Bush back to drink.

A Washington source said: "The sad fact is that he has been sneaking drinks for weeks now. Laura may have only just caught him - but the word is his drinking has been going on for a while in the capital.

He's been in a pressure cooker for months.

"The war in Iraq, the loss of American lives, has deeply affected him.
He takes every soldier's life personally. It has left him emotionally drained.

The result is he's taking drinks here and there, likely in private, to cope. "And now with the worst domestic crisis in his administration over Katrina, you pray his drinking doesn't go out of control."

Another source said: "I'm only surprised to hear that he hadn't taken a shot sooner. Before Katrina, he was at his wit's end. I've known him for years.
He's been a good ol' Texas boy forever. George had a drinking problem for years that most professionals would say needed therapy. He doesn't believe in it [therapy], he never got it. He drank his way through his youth, through college and well into his thirties. Everyone's drinking around him."

Another source said: "A family member told me they fear George is 'falling apart.' The First Lady has been assigned the job of gatekeeper." Bush's history of drinking dates back to his youth.
Speaking of his time as a young man in the National Guard, he has said:
"One thing I remember, and I'm most proud of, is my drinking and partying. Those were the days my friends. Those were the good old days!"

Age 26 in 1972, he reportedly rounded off a night's boozing with his 16-year-old brother Marvin by challenging his father to a fight.

On November 1, 2000, on the eve of his first presidential election, Bush acknowledged that in 1976 he was arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol near his parents' home in Maine. Age 30 at the time, Bush pleaded guilty and paid a $150 fine. His driving privileges were temporarily suspended in Maine.

"I'm not proud of that," he said. "I made some mistakes. I occasionally drank too much, and I did that night. I learned my lesson." In another interview around that time, he said: "Well, I don't think I had an addiction. You know it's hard for me to say. I've had friends who were, you know, very addicted... and they required hitting bottom (to start) going to AA. I don't think that was my case."

During his 2000 presidential campaign, there were also persistent questions about past cocaine use. Eventually Bush denied using cocaine after 1992, then quickly extended the cocaine-free period back to 1974, when he was 28.

Dr. Justin Frank, a Washington D.C. psychiatrist and author of Bush On The Couch: Inside The Mind Of The President, told The National Enquirer: "I do think that Bush is drinking again. Alcoholics who are not in any program, like the President, have a hard time when stress gets to be great.

"I think it's a concern that Bush disappears during times of stress. He spends so much time on his ranch. It's very frightening."

I don't think that using a slinky is very good antenna. You might as well use a straight wire.

You would be better off using a minimum of three or more parallel wires through spacers to approximate a cylinder shape. The more parallel wires you use the bigger the diameter of the cylinder could be.

Using a slinky is convenient and what I advocated above would be a lot more trouble to make but it would work better.

I haven't owned a slinky since I was a kid.

I can't answer your question but I'm glad he is gone from Radio Netherlands broadcasts.

People that pursue any journalistic avenue don't do anyone a dam bit of good when they are so one sided on an issue. People are mostly looking for information because they can think for themselves. When I am actually looking for commentary I want impartialality. I want to understand how they arrived at their point of view. The best example of this I can think of is Bill O'Reilly. You may not agree with him but he explains the situation as he sees it and why he comes to the conclusions that he has.

You may not agree with his view or conclusions but you do understand the logic of how he got them. This alone helps you understand your own position on an issue.

There is a difference between "teaching religion" and "teaching about religion". The latter is acceptable and the former is not. This is

I listened to the samples on the sites and all of the "High Quality" DRM samples sounded better to my ears than the corresponding analog signal.

The "Robust Quality" sample had a lot of digitizing artifacts, but that used a very low bit rate. However, it may be preferable to the analog equivalent. That would be a personal judgement, some will prefer the analog, some the digital.

From what I hear in the samples, any of the 64 QAM/"High Quality" signals is better than the analog equivalent. To me, DRM has good potential.

Yes, I used to live in the Springs. The scenery was very nice.
Shortwave reception was good too, but affected in the summer by a lot

I completely agree that Scotland has a serious problem with violence. However, it is not the most dangerous place to be. Most of the assaults reported are amongst gangs; basically people who choose to be in a certain place at a certain time. That is not to say there aren't people who get mugged etc. However, the murder rate is much lower than many other "western" nations. England has more than its share of problems too.

Anyway, the UN report was based on a telephone poll conducted over 5 years ago! Not the best indicator of what is happening now, and definately not the "big picture".
Scotland is a welcoming place for visitors. Few see problems with violence. Many return to experience the hospitality. I have had many drunken nights out in Glasgow (apparently the worst city) without incident over the last couple of years.

First off, some radios like the GE Superadio series and other AM/FM/SW portables are inherently noisier on AC power. Not much you can do about it other than use batteries for serious listening. Receivers meant for AC power only are usually better shielded and filtered.

What I'd do is plug the radio in and shut off all other power box circuit breakers except the circuit the radio is on. If the noise persists, it's either the radio or some other electrical device hooked into that circuit. If the noise goes away, turn on circuit breakers one by one until the noise comes back... then investigate items on the last breaker thrown.

Could also be a functional, yet marginal power transformer up the street, a neighbors microwave or window air conditioner, or even bad wiring in your walls or at the pole. Electrical noise can be tricky to find. Good luck!

The slinky windom I had was far superior to any commercial or any other antenna I have ever had. Huge signal strength. I used to run my radios with an AM BCB killer to keep the nearby AM station on 1560 from causing problems due to huge (big enough that 20DB attenuation wasn't even close to unpegging the S-Meter, it took 80 at least) signals getting into the receiver. I still have those AM killers I made back then, but haven't had to use them on the slopers and dipole I have now.
There's a lot of length both physically and electrically. Your parellel wire antenna would be a major hassle to make, and to keep together. The slinky isn't.

And it was far cheaper than the Slopers and Eavesdroppers too. Not to mention it lasted longer...nearly 15 years. I changed the rope and coax every 5.

I think twinlead or ladder line is essentially as good as a cylinder

This may boil down to personal taste. I don't like the sound of the "high quality" mode either although is certainly much better than the lower bit rate. Even in high quality mode I still hear annoying audio artifacts that I would not chose to listen too.

DRM is a lame implementation. For the cost of changing over to this system I would want a bigger payoff in performance and functionality than it currently provides.

There is also to great a risk in this system being abused to limit information that is now world wide. I would not want that to change in any way.

Yes Radio shack and few other places have clamp on chokes you can put on the power cord that may help. If the power supply is a wall wart type the the choke on the lead to the radio may help.

Some power strips have build it filtering that may help if the noise is conducted on the line from some other appliance. The choke on the power cord would also help minimize this problem.

If the noise source is in the radios power supply itself and the supply is in the radios case nether of these items will help.

Thanks for the excellent rundown of the DXpedition, John. Once I'm retired, I will have the time/money to maybe play in that leauge once or twice! Something to look forward to, anyhow.

I'm on a gently rolling plain in the southern part of Michigan, with a (basically) N/S oriented 110' longwire, center tapped. I don't spend as much time at the dial as many DX'ers, (too many other things that must be done) but I have a total of two out-of-country catches on MW: Cuba and American Virgin Islands. A 5,000 watter from central Texas, Denver or the lakes region of Manitoba is my idea of a really good catch. My best verified pickup of a 250W station is about 110 miles at night - it's all relative, I guess!

Best,

Tony

Or maybe because the Whitehouse still withholds papers regarding his background.

They are blatantly pandering to

So? Repubs do the same with issues like Terry's Law, banning federal funded stem cell research, pushing for creationism teaching in public schools, relaxing environmental laws, and wanting to ban same sex marriage.

David Dewhurst,Texas LT Governor on Fox tv news said there were no deaths as a result of hurricane Rita.There was a guy by the name of Airline (Texas Starr,she sent me the AP report) and he was on one of those evacuee buses out of Houston and he wound up in Chattanooga,Tennessee.He was just a regular guy and he got a debit card from the Red Cross.He visited a night club in Chattanooga and somebody followed him outside and his body was later discovered in a weedy area by a road in the Chattanooga area with five shots in his head and the shell casings lying near his body,somebody killed him for his debit card.And there is that bus near the Houston area that cought fire and the oxygen tanks exploding killing 24 people on the bus.

4876. The Future and Fate of DRM and IBOC - "The Market Makers" Will Decide !

Telamon,
Here is a possible "Market Indicator" about the Future and Fate of both DRM on Shortwave and IBOC on AM and FM Broadcast Radio.
The proposed Mini-CCRadio that is scheduled for release this fall.
So do you see DRM or IBOC listed as a feature or an option ? - NO !
http://www.ccrane.com/radios/am-fm-radios/mini-cc-radio.aspx
The next big indicator will be the new Eton/Grundig/Tecsun, Sangean and Degen Radios that will be released in the next few years.
Will DRM and IBOC be a feature or an option with these Radios :
Or simply something that is not there; and thereby going nowhere [.]
Will the replacement for the Grundig Satetellit 800 Millennium Radio feature DRM on Shortwave and IBOC on AM and FM Broadcast Radio ?
If not... then the Manufactures are saying a Big "NO" to both DRM for Shortwave and IBOC for AM and FM Broadcast Radio.
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Eton-Elite-E2-DRM-IBOC-Radio/Will it be named the Eton {Elite} E2 with "DRM & IBOC" Radio ?
IBOC may be saved by the Automobile Manufactures if they as a Group start placing IBOC capable AM and FM Broadcast Radios in their new Cars and Trucks. BUT ! - These same Auto Makers are behind both XM and Sirius Satellite Radio Systems and Service : Which has a bigger pay-off and pay-back for them then IBOC could have.
Again "The Market Makers" will decide the Future and Fate of both DRM on Shortwave and IBOC on AM and FM Broadcast Radio.

I'm wondering where the leadership is in the Republican party. If Bush's motto is basically, "What, me worry?", then you guys have failed rather badly too. If running a war that has no end in sight is leadership, then the Repubs have failed the public.

Absolutely not. I am not anti-religious at all, in fact where (and when) I was schooled we learned about all the major religions though we were not schooled in practicing the ritual, just the history of when & how started and the basics of their beliefs. And I did not

OK, a Tivoli Model 1 is not a shortwave receiver, but I do recall this radio being discussed in here a few years ago.

Anyway, I decided to buy one today. I get home, open the box, plug in the radio, and turn it on in eager anticipation of soothing FM sounds.

Click ... WWWWHHHHHHOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOMMMMMMMMMMMMMMMMMM!!! Nothing but incredibly loud feedback!!! I thought maybe Pete Townshend was in the room. Yes, I tried different outlets and locations, same result.

Has anyone else had problems with their Tivoli, or am I just lucky? I was disappointed to see that, despite the name, it's apparently just another piece of Chinese junk.

Here is one I know about. Both links are actually for the same radio by two of the companies that are working together on it.
<http://www.codingtechnologies.com/products/applic_broadcast.htm>
<http://www.mayah.com/newsletter/newsletter6-05.htm>

Coding technologies owns some of the code and algorithms that operate in the radio. Licensing the code is their way to make money on this venture.

Mayah is an electronics manufacturer.

This thing looks like a portable but it's not because it does not operate on batteries. It uses a 100-240VAC, 1 Amp power supply so you would not get very far on AA, C or D batteries.

I wrote years ago that DRM portables would have a power problem. You have to run a lot of processing to get the audio. In order to get the power down to reasonable levels will require CMOS custom IC's that take big bucks to develop. That is not going to happen unless the entire coding and all algorithms become public property.

Helium is a trace element in the atmosphere. It is recovered when air is compressed to a liquid, and the individual gases are boiled off into separate storage tanks. The US government had a strategic reserve of helium for military use, but anyone with enough money was able to produce usable quantities of it. Air Products in the US operates these "Air reduction plants". They have one in Middletown Ohio. The liquid oxygen is sold to AK Steel for their bessimer converters that make pig iron and iron slag out of raw materials.

I finally heard from Sony Parts re replacement telescoping whip for 7600GR. Price is $24.50 + Shipping (unspecified amount) + local taxes on order.

Is this thing silver plated or Platinum plated? I think I will try to find a third party replacement.

Radio Shack used to sell replacement whips and they were fairly inexpensive. I'm not sure if they still do or if they would fit but it's worth a try. It seems like they were about %4 or $6.

Untill you can find a replacement antenna, (assuming your antenna is broken,it can be soldered back together or you can jam a cut off bolt stud between the two broken pieces and it work as good as new) rig a piece of coathanger on there or get an alligator clip and a piece of wire and use that.Look around for a rabbit ears or a single whip tv antenna too,stores such as wal mart sell them.

I'm not sure that many people outside the U.S, or even here, for that matter, realize just why the New Orleans gun confiscation drive stopped short.
Had you been listening, after someone tackled a little gray haired lady, disarmed her, and dragged her from her home, you may have heard a roaring beginning to arise. This came from all across the nation, and was intended to awaken any politician wanting to keep a job. We were heard.
National Guardsmen, from many units, were not willing to take part, nor were many law enforcement agents, they were not willing to commit this crime against their People, and their Constitution. Their voices were heard, as well.
Freedom is never a thing to surrender, for any reason. Far more Americans know this, today, than only a couple of weeks ago. It was a valuable, and timely, lesson.

I haven't seen any evidence that there is a restraining order; it's suspect that this supposed TRO came a week after all the people had been evacuated from New Orleans.

So it has nothing to do. Kind of a hollow victory, eh boys? Now if it's a fraud I think the FBI needs to find out who did it, right?

4945. Five most important things for top DX

Newsgroup: rec.radio.shortwave
Date: 2005-09-25 09:46:17 UTC
From: John Plimmer <plimmer@nospamtelkomsa.net> Message-ID: <dh5rlp$858$1@ctb-nnrp2.saix.net>
Source record: 41340

A group of what I would call the world's top DXer's recently debated the four most important causes of getting world class DX results. Whilst there was not unanimous agreement, the general consensus was that the four most important things in getting those really rare far off DX catches was:

> 1) site location
> 2) conditions (propagation)
> 3) antenna
> 4) DXing ability > 5) receiver
in that order being the most important for DX reception.

1) I agree with that totally. As Conrad Hilton said of the hotel business, the three most important things are:
POSITION, POSITION, POSITION and so it is with DXing.
A really good DX site can't be beaten.
Very best is a quiet site at the seaside next to the surf.

2) Propagation conditions also play a most vital part. Poor conditions = poor results no matter what.

3) and 4) - I would rate 4) DXing ability slightly ahead of 3) antenna. I used to know a young DXer who got the most amazing results just because of his innate DXing ability. Now we have my mate Gary Deacon who also gets the most amazing results at Miller's Point with only 40m/130ft of wire strung out. Admittedly though, a short but well placed antenna can do wonders at a good DX site.
I also have achieved amazing DX results with antenna's as short as 100 foot strung out well at holiday locations

5) receiver - I agree with this totally. The fellow I mentioned above used to DX with a Lowe HF150, a really modest RX, but he used to run rings around many of us with much more fancy gear.

Then one year I will never forget in the Danish DX club annual competition - a fella with a Yaesu FRG-7700 won hands down. This is a really mediocre RX..!!

And now we have my friend Gary Deacon DXing away with his FROG, the venerable analogue Yaesu FRG-7. Now I owned a FROG for a year on account of its legendary MW DX capabilities, but personally wrote it off as near useless due to its wide open 1000 Khz roofing filter and wide not very good filters. Yet Gary consistently produces top line results of world class quality on his FROG, proving the point that DXing ability is far more important than a decent RX. A sobering thought for those of us touting the top line RX's we own.

I asked Gary recently why he uses the old FROG and doesn't upgrade to a decent modern digital RX. He answered by giving a pleasurable sigh and said it was "steam radio"...!!! He has a Drake R7 by the way, an outstanding DX machine in my opinion, but he prefers his FROG and does exceptionally well with it...!!??

I work with a couple of high end receiver manufacturers that are right now dealing with the question of IBOC. The licensing costs extend not only to receiver manufacturers, but to the broadcasters as well, and right the costs of implementing IBOC are steep. Mid 5 figures in most cases. And that's becoming a roadblock for the implementation of IBOC on the transmission end for many broadcasters. DRM is little diffferent in that regard. What movtivate broadcasters to move this way is two fold. One is that Powell's FCC mandated that all new broadcast technologies must be digital. Period. TV, Radio. Digital. The other has been the holy grail of broadcasters since David Sarnoff bludgeoned his first competitor: Subscription over-the-air broadcast. Make no mistake, that's coming.

The technical advantages of Ibiquity on FM are minimal. In A-B tests of FM IBOC, listeners have noted a difference, but not a clear preference for HD on FM, but only when the analog signal was processed in the traditional manner. And as many preferred analog as HD. When both were unprocessed, listeners couldn't tell analog FM from IBOC HD Radio. So, the value, at least for now, is in the buzzword.

There have been some minor, improvements in signal areas where multipath is an issue. Instead of picket fencing, in severe areas, there are drop outs, when the error correction fails. Dropouts, in the tests I've been involved in, have been rare. Multipath resistance in most cases is actually quite good.

On the AM side, HD radio is an enormous noise source. With at least two broadcasters in Chicago turning off their HD signal to protect their Milwaukee stations from the QRM. Audio performance, again, is of questionable benefit, because of the digital artifacts and low bit encoding. Some I've heard have been downright awful.

In AM modulated signals, DRM, in tests I've been involved in, has been a clear improvement over Ibiquity in regard to audio quality. Where bandwidth exists, the audio can be quite striking. But that depends on the bitrate, and often, the stability of the signal. QRM, however, is an enormous problem for DRM, like Ibiquity, and both have proven to take more bandwidth than originally promised. Creating problems for the analog listener. Many car radios extant, are unable to separate the digital hash from the analog audio on the AM side. And especially the AM hash from first, second, and often third adjacent stations, in and out of market. Receivers are complex, and expensive, and they consume huge amounts of power, rendering battery operation problematic for the casual user. For hobbyist geeks like the members of this group, that's less of a problem. But, as has been pointed out in so many tasteless ways, dramatically and bluntly so in the case of Mark Byford, we're of no consequence in the grand scheme of things broadcast.

Radio Nederland has stated time and again that they're committed to Shortwave, and have embraced DRM. They're by far in the minority of SW broadcasters in their commitment, and with political and economic forces rising to curb production of, and make illegal receivers capable of non domestic broadcast reception (Billy Tauzin has been pushing a bandplan for US type accepted receivers that would not permit the public access to non broadcast media for years, now) and BPL threatening much of non broadcast spectra, the outlook for market and DRM driven expansion of SW in the US is dim. With most national networks moving to FM in Europe, and Worldspace elsewhere, the overall outlook for SW is not looking too good. And politically, digital modulation, means local-only reception, whether UKW or MW, and that means the ability to control the public's access to information. Don't think for a minute that's not on the radar for most governments.

Broadcasters endorse any moves that curtail domestic non broadcast listening, because it puts them in a powerful and exclusive position in control of vital information, without fear of contradiction from alternate sources. It also puts subcription over-the-air broadcast within grasp. And FCC has stated it's desires to move all broadcast away from analog modulation schemes. But, as has been pointed out before, licensing of the technology is expensive. So broadcasters' motivations are mixed.

All of which means a more or less chaotic state of affairs for both DRM and Ibiquity, both in the US and abroad. And if the market is to decide the fate of these technologies, then we should take a lesson from another market driven broadcast innovation: AM stereo.

Market drive in broadcast is a hit or miss affair. FM had been languishing on the edges of extinction since Amstrong took his beating from Sarnoff. It wasn't until FCC mandated in the 60's that all new radios produced were to have both AM and FM stages, that FM listening began to take off. Even though FM radios had been available and affordable for years. Similarly, UHF TV had existed for decades, with survivability hovering near zero for UHF broadcasters until FCC mandated that all new TV sets would carry all UHF channels. Color TV took more than two decades to catch fire. FM stereo didn't become universal until the late 70's. AM stereo...well, it was a good idea at the time. And we should all thank Leonard Kahn for his experiments in AM stereo 50 years ago. It could have been fun. We can certainly point to the market drive for THAT success.

So, without an immediate public embrace of the technology, it's not likely that DRM or Ibiquity will take off. And the public isn't likely to be spending $500 or more on a radio for debatable improvements in performance, when 'just as good' technology is available for less than $10 at any Wal-Mart. And if you think that high performance audio is an issue with the public, then consider that people are getting their music on their cell phones, for Heaven's sake. $500 radios for IBOC or DRM, in that climate is, to borrow from Reverend Johnson in 'Blazing Saddles,' "...just jerking off."

Now, a Federal mandate for digital modulation schemes is in place. And a Federal type acceptance and conversion timetable isn't too far off.

But then, we were supposed to have all been switched over to HD TV by the first of 2006, too. And Michael Powell is gone. And there is no mandate for receiver manufacturers to include digital demodulation in all new products.

Don't expect big things for DRM, or Ibiquity, anytime soon.

One year is in etternaty in electronics. :-)

Here are some press releases concerning DRM/DAB of the IFA (Internationale Funk Aufstellung) Berlin and IBC Amsterdam (both where held earlier this month):

One in english:
http://www.infosat.lu/Meldungen/?srID=53&msgID=17027

Another one:
http://www.4rfv.co.uk/industrynews.asp?ID=43833

One in dutch buth with some pictures:
http://home.planet.nl/~rickvdw/digitaal/DRM-IBC2005/

If you run "drm dab receivers ifa ibc" throu your favourite search-engine, you'll come up with more then sufficiant links.

These things are geared up for the European market: FM/RDS, AM (no SSB), DAB, mp3 and wma-playback, SD/MMC interface, ...
Also note that the sangean radio builds on the design of their DAB-range not on their range of SW-receivers.

So I guess these models will only have either MW and LW, and a limited number of SW-bands (probably only the "local" bands), but it looks logical they will work on this design in other variations, like FM/AM/IBOC-FM/IBOC-AM for the US, or AM/FM/SSB/DRM for shortwave-receivers.

The receivers are expected by the end of the year, so we will know more about features and prices.

Also note that the power-consumtion issue (as on the mayah) has been solved as they have been working on DAB/DMB modules for inside mobile-phones (DAB/DMB uses more power then DRM).

More information about the chipset can be found here:
http://focus.ti.com/docs/apps/catalog/tisolutions/tisolutions.jhtml?templateId=938&path=templatedata/cm/general/data/audio_digrad_drm

Finally notice that these radio's are market under the "DR" logo, which combines DAB and DRM. So, this is not a "DRM" radio, but a "DR" radio!

Cheerio! Kr. Bonne.

Great link. Tried a couple of technical searches. You get a lot of Any pilot worth his salt and desiring to live performs the calculations in one way or another. You can uae the old mechanical E6B as I do or you can use the new electronic calculator style or you can do the calcs with pen and paper. I don't know many folks that use pen and paper.

I still use mine. They are quite simple to use and and you would

Charles... The point is is this pr guns article Fiction?

It said

I'm not sure that many people outside the U.S, or even here, for that matter, realize just why the New Orleans gun confiscation drive stopped short.

Had you been listening, after someone tackled a little gray haired lady, disarmed her, and dragged her from her home, you may have heard a roaring beginning to arise. This came from all across the nation, and was intended to awaken any politician wanting to keep a job. We were heard.

National Guardsmen, from many units, were not willing to take part, nor were many law enforcement agents, they were not willing to commit this crime against their People, and their Constitution. Their voices were heard, as well.

Freedom is never a thing to surrender, for any reason. Far more Americans know this, today, than only a couple of weeks ago. It was a valuable, and timely, lesson.

I haven't seen any evidence that there is a restraining order; it's suspect that this supposed TRO came a week after all the people had been evacuated from New Orleans.

So it has nothing to do. Kind of a hollow victory, eh boys? Now if it's a fraud I think the FBI needs to find out who did it, right?

Any significant differences between the Palomar MLB-1 and the RF Systems MLB? They are both about the same price, the Palamor looks like it's designed a little better for outdoor use (built-in eyehook for hanging). Opinions please; thanks.

Keep returning it,keep returning it,,, you might rack up a lot of shipping and handling charges too.If it was me,I would return it and buy a different brand name of radio.Ask them if they will cover all shipping and handling charges to and fro,if not,I would forget all about Tivoli radios.

Somehow this doesn't surprise me. The HF-150 is a 'meat and potatoes' type of receiver, but it's surprising to see just what it can do at times. It's a well-designed receiver. The people who made the HF-150 understood that there's more to a good receiver than a big pricetag, a plastic case, and lots and lots of "features".

I've had the Palomar since 1996 (drove to Escondildo and bought it

Was wondering if anyone here has had any experience removing smoker's odors from a used radio? I won an auction for a Radio Shack DX-398, and I had originally sold mine to pay some bills. I was ecstatic to have won, and am STILL ecstatic to have "my" radio back, and here it will STAY for all time. Just it stinks like it was used for an ashtray. Was considering putting it in an airtight container with baking soda... (No baking soda ON the console or anything, mind you... Just sharing a large container with a cup of it harmlessly to the side.)

Just get another one. They are nice sounding retro-cute looking radios that compete with offerings from Sangean and Boston Acoustics. Expect nice somewhat over-bassed FM sound in a small box.

A Maid, An Aide, The Secret Service, or Laura

If they (White House) Did sue, it would be through a Proxy, The Good Reverand Fumbletitties or something..

You mean like the supposed photo of a B-17 on the moon? Yes, I saw that article on the Enquirer front page in the late 1980's while at the grocery store. Maybe they confirmed the story with Art Bell.

I don't see how this is an 'ability'. No one was born with this gift.
The beauty of being able to pass on information via printed or spoken means is the real gift.

The discoveries of others may be easily passed on, saving countless hours of needless rediscovery every time information is needed.

The ability to find and USE published schedules and propagation reports is the real requirement as opposed to an innate 'skill'. Merely turning a radio dial, contrary to what a self proclaimed expert says, isn't anywhere near as demanding as, say, tying your shoe laces.

..but then, he has a tough time doing even that. Not enough time in Don't read too much into text. Ability to perform a complex task such as dxing can and is usually gained by experience as well as trial and error. For those of us willing to put in the time and learn from both mistakes and successes the ability to dx is honed over time.

In 2004, O'Reilly was sued by a former associate producer of his show, Andrea Mackris, for sexual harassment. He denied everything, and described Mackris' lawsuit as "the single most evil thing I have ever experienced, and I've seen a lot." He countersued for extortion, and took a public stance of no compromise. "My career could be ruined", O'Reilly said, "and I'm very well aware of that. But I can't let people do this. I've been in the business 30 years, I have a clean record, and I just simply can't let them do it. So if I have to go down, I'll go down. But I'm not going to be a crime victim." Mackris' complaint, however, included such detailed descriptions of O'Reilly's allegedly sexually provocative phone calls, many observers suspected she may have tape-recorded the conversations. And two weeks after she filed her complaint, O'Reilly settled. "It's over, and I'm happy", said Mackris. "I can't say anything else, but I do appreciate everybody." There was no admission of wrongdoing, and the cash settlement was kept quiet as part of the agreement, but the Washington Post had reported a week earlier that Mackris had turned down offers as high as $2-million, so the final figure was presumably higher than that. The settlement also included a stipulation that Mackris would destroy any tapes of O'Reilly's alleged phone calls "if such tapes exist."

Even stand-alone on a table well away from a wall the little radio overemphasizes the bass. It borders on annoying with male voices on NPR and other talk programs. That sound is quite popular these days, witness the mega-bass buttons and rumbly-low speakers popular on home entertainment systems these days.

A Ham Radio Operator whom I know via emailing back and forth with once in a while,(he is over 84 years old) and he uses a Yaesu radio.I say Antenna is the most important thing.Kind of funny we don't hear much from folks in this news group whom use Yaesu Radios.

The "sealed in a bag with baking soda" idea can't hurt, and may indeed help - I would think it would take several days. Before you do that, mix up a solution of ammonia and warm water. Wring the cloth out thoroughly, and wipe down the radio as well as you can - this will not hurt it. You may even want to do it twice. If the water turns a faint yellowish color, you are getting rid of most of the source of smell right there. Follow that with a fresh solution of baking soda in water. Remember to always wring the washcloth out very thoroughly.
Then, if you wish, follow up with the baking-soda-in-a-bag idea. The combination should greatly diminish - if not eliminate completely - the smell. And as someone else wrote, just plain "time" will help, too.

Tony

Maybe I will start making my own booze.A few one gallon glass jars,some water and apples and bananas and grapes and some sugar,(don't screw the caps on too tight,just lay a piece of cloth or cardboard over the tops to keep the bugs out) Set em in a warm place for a few days and let that stuff sit there and ferment real good.Yeah,that's the ticket,home made home brewed Fruit Booze.

....because a loofa is a sponge that lives in the sea.
...just like Spongebob Squarepants and Patrick and Squidward.

In O'reilly's case however, I'd like to see him get whacked upside the head with a Yellowfin Tuna, sort of like as in the classic Monty Python "fish slapping sketch". :)

Yes,

OReilly said if she has "anything" on him like tapes, "let's hear them" he said. Did we ever get to hear them? NO. Why not?
Because we would have heard a creep talking about dildos and sex while his wife and children were home waiting for their "loving dad"

He is married and cheated on his wife AND children all while coming off as this high and mighty Dudley Do Right who can do no wrong and never did. He likes to put down people who even come close to making him look like the phoney he is in real life.

Like Phil Donague for example. He will never allow him "back on my program again" Why is that Bill? Is it because he's smarter then you and makes you look and sound like the lying right wing POS that you are?

Phil put him in his place so good, I was estatic. Bill sat there like a defeated loser and he showed it clearly. He thinks now that his "campaigns" against the oil companies and putting down some things bush does will get him more viewers and more "hits" for his show so he can paid more. He wants to put on this show of being in the middle of the road or even partly left wing so he can get more viewers. It all comes down to misinformation for the public and more money for him and rupert.

I used to think he was for real but he's not. Yes, he's more then willing to send other parents kids to fight and die in Iraq but are his children there?

NO.

Will they EVER enlist and be put in harms way?

NEVER EVER you can bet on that.
It's amazing how so many people believe in this creepy underhanded liar.

If you can take the chassis out of the radio's case without too much trouble,wash the case throughly a few times and let the chassis sit in an airtight container with baking soda.No guarantee you will ever get rid of all of the smoky odor.Cigarette smoke is very bad for electronic parts in radios,computers,all kinds of electronic thingys and it can greatly shorten the lifespan of all things electronic.

Not so sure about that, but from some stuff I read recently they still make money from certain brands imported from the UK.

Radio Shack sells a little microphone thingy that has a little suction cup on it.(I own two of them,one I bought at a Radio Shack store and another one I bought at a Goodwill store) It can be used for tapeing phone calls.The little suction cup doesn't work too good on some phones so use some scotch tape to tape it down real good.Just plug it into a tape recorder or a digital recorder (I own several tape recorders and a RCA digital recorder that can record for six hours,I bought it at a wal mart store a few years ago) and it's good to go.

As does the atrocious mic technique of most broadcasters these days.

I get tickled no end to see a mic that costs more than my car virtually in Howard Stern's mouth.

Most jocks believe that eating a mic gives them bigger balls on the air. Many others believe that it's the only way to overcome bad acoustics. And then there's the third group that mics outside the pattern because they believe that it relieves them of plosives. All off which contribute to a boomy, as distinguished from bassy, sound.

One of my mentors years ago, use to say, you can't overcome weak talent with poor technique.

Once again the CooKoo of the list posts about something he knows little of.

Yes, cigarettes are bad for your health, but I've not seen any radios of the 50's 60's tube era that were "damaged" by smoke/nicotine.
Hammarlund SP-600's and R-390 series receivers were literally covered with a golden brown coating of nicotine and continued to work in spite of it.

Cuhulin, you actually need to get an antenna and a real shortwave receiver and then study real hard before you unleash those two peas that rattle around inside your malformed skull.

You've not taken a taxi around here. A ride to the airport can get a couple of decent mics.

The only time I ever recorded anybody was that married Irish woman when she and her hubby visited Disneyworld a few years ago.I asked her if it was ok to tape record (I had sent her a phone card with some other gifts for them at their hotel in Orlando,but I think she used about nienty percent of the minutes on that phone card on other phone calls,but that's ok) our phone chats,she said it was ok with her.They live in Bognor Regis,England and I have told her many times before over the years via emails she has became too britinized,I couldn't hardly understand a word she was saying on the phone and she couldn't hardly understand my old Southern Mississippi drwal either.

For sale: C. Crane co. "Select-A-Tenna" original AM radio antenna.
Works great and comes with instructions. Doubles the weak signal sensitivity during daytime. Has slight crack near base but is barely noticeable and does not effect antennas performance. $20 obo plus shipping costs.

Please reply if interested.

You're confusing the military with the Janet Reno FBI and BATF. The US military isn't even allowed to do that kind of stuff in foreign countries during wars.

I found to be spending quite a lot of money in throw away batteries using my Sony ICF-SW7600GR portable receiver. Thus I bought a filtered (stabilized?) power adaptor (a generic one), it works well within many frequencies but on some of them (always AM) there's background noise and it's impossible to listen to LW, as it makes too much noise there.

I assume it has something to do with the mains, so my question is can I do something to filter, even more, the power cord that goes into the receiver?

Thank you!

They work pretty well actually. The effect is less noticeable on easy to hear stations. They improve the Q of the built-in antenna quite markedly on weak signals.

Pretty much, yes. And I've seen him eating one.

One of my colleagues in the company, said they were so horrified at his mic technique and the terrible sound as a result, that they removed the U-47 and started cycling other mics in and out. Until they found one

You wouldn't open up your radio and dump some cigarette ashes around in there and then put the radio back together and use it,would you? The very tiny particles of cigarette smoke gets into everything that isn't hermetically sealed.Not good for any kinds of radios at all.

What made FM take off was the popularity of mass appeal programming found by listeners migrating to FM as FM radios became more widely available. FM had been around for more than 20 years by the time the general market discovered it, with programming limited to classical music, because ASCAP royalties did not have to be paid, and beautiful music formats because of it's cost effectiveness. Most FM stations had short lifespans until the 60's, because there was just no one in any numbers listening. Primarily because of the limited value of making the investment in an FM capable radio for what little was actually on the bands. Even as late as the 60's, FM capable radios were expensive. Portables often running $50 or more. My first FM was a Raleigh 9 transistor, in the late 60's, after FM radios became manufactured in numbers, and it still cost almost $30, a lot of money then, when AM radios had been available for half that.

Underground radio went dark for the same reasons most FMs went dark in the late 40's and 50's: there weren't enough listeners to support it. At the same time, Top 40 and AOR radio were stealing listeners from AM in droves, dwarfing the size of underground audiences.

I have a certain old hard back book around here somewhere,I bought the book at a Goodwill store about twelve years ago.The book was printed on recycled paper like many books of the World War Two era were.If I remember,the title of the book is Wild Blue Yonder and the book has a lot of information about who was doing business with who during the World War Two era.It is a very interesting book and has information about many other things too.For example,a lot of people think Germany produced the best steel from ore in Germany.Not true,the Briery range in France had better quality of ore for producing steel.

Let me make a clarification to that. I'm not suggesting that AOR and Top 40 were around in the late 40's and 50's. But they, were, in fact, latecomers to the FM band around the time that underground radio was in it's final days. Stations like KDNA, ST Louis lost their asses to KSHE (AOR), KADI (AOR) and KSLQ (Top 40.)

KDNA never pulled appreciable numbers out of a few high school and college kids, and was replaced with Schulke Beautiful Music as KEZK. In fact, KDNA's audience was dwarfed by KXOK (AM Top 40), and even among the high school FM afficionados of the time, didn't make a strong showing against KSLQ. College kids were listening more to KSHE than KDNA.

What KDNA did do well, was introduce non mainstream music to an audience that was already hungering for something that was out of the popular tide. John McLaughlin, Robbie Basho, Ravi Shankar, and Leo Kottke were staples of KDNA programming. I heard my first Firesign Theatre on KDNA. But the numbers tuning in, like most alternative formats, were very small.

KACO, also licensed in St Louis attempted undeground radio, but the guy who owned it couldn't affort the upkeep, eventually running only 12 hours a day, and spinning the tunes himself. Ask anyone how many times a day he played the theme from "Mannix." By the time KACO went away, me and the guy who owned it were the only ones who knew it was there.

Some underground stations made a bit of noise. Some actually did reasonably well. But they are dark today for the same reasons as any of the stations who ever went dark: Lack of interest.

Shame, really. Some of them, even KDNA, were actually quite good and well executed.

Underground radio was an interesting historical moment in broadcasting's colourful history, but it was hardly the impetus claimed for it.

The Majority Leader of the United States Senate yesterday took to the Senate floor and said Congress should quickly pass the National Rifle Association's dream legislation to block lawsuits against reckless gun sellers. The reason speed is essential, according to Senator Frist: The U.S. firearms industry may collapse, and "the Department of Defense faces the real prospect of having to outsource sidearms for our soldiers to foreign manufacturers."

In a time of war, the Senate's Republican leadership would like to suspend work on defense measures so they can work on the NRA's bill. If they don't Senator Frist is suggesting, our troops will be unarmed.

"Without this legislation it is probable the American manufacturers of legal firearms will be faced with a real prospect of going out of business, ending a critical source of supply for our armed forces, our police and out citizens," Frist said.

"I am amazed," said Mike Barnes, President of the Brady Campaign to Prevent Gun Violence. "What a remarkable, unsupportable, incredible scenario supporters of this legislation have dreamed up. The basic message they're using is that our soldiers in the field, at any moment now, are going to be without guns. Any moment now, they're suggesting, every gun maker in the United States is going out of business. It's absolutely shameless - the gun lobby's own little yellowcake strategy."

The Defense Department has never stated that they are in danger of losing military supplies; and there is no evidence that any major American gun company is in financial trouble, much less financial problems that would be cured by this special interest giveaway. Consider these facts:

The only two publicly-held gun companies have filed recent statements with the Securities and Exchange Commission contradicting the claim that they are threatened by lawsuits. Smith & Wesson filed a statement with the SEC on June 29, 2005, stating that "we expect net product sales for fiscal 2005 to be approximately $124 million, a 5% increase over the $117.9 million reported for fiscal 2004.
Firearms sales for fiscal 2005 are expected to increase by approximately 11% over fiscal 2004 levels." In another filing, dated March 10, 2005, Smith & Wesson wrote, "In the nine months ended January 31, 2005, we incurred $4,535 in defense costs, net of amounts received from insurance carriers, relative to product liability and municipal litigation."
Meanwhile, gun manufacturer Sturm, Ruger told the SEC in a March 11, 2005 filing: "[I]t is not probable and is unlikely that litigation, including punitive damage claims, will have a material adverse effect on the financial position of the Company."

The level of litigation against gun manufacturers and dealers is miniscule. From 1993-2003, 57 suits were filed against gun industry defendants, out of what the State Court Journal published by the National Center for State Courts estimates is 10 million tort suits. The aggregate damages paid in tort suits per year is $82.6 billion [U.S. Tort Costs, 2002 Update, Tillinghast-Towers Perrin, 200 figures], while damages paid in gun suits each year is $441,800, excluding unreported confidential settlements.

I have read other posts saying that cleaning with Windex removed some of the stenciled labels on the face of the radio. I don't know if plain vinegar and water may be safer.

Please do not equate "digital" with "subscription". Overhere in Europe, all digital radio-stations are FTA and for TV, there are more TV-stations available in the clear in DVB then in PAL.

E.g., PAL has been stopped for terrestial broadcasts in some areas in Germany (like in Berlin) and has meant that the number of stations available (in the clear) in DVB-T has been multiplied by 3 to 4 compaired to what was available in OTA PAL.
Most of these stations where already available (FTA) over digital satellite, so these are not "junk" stations.

Concerning radio, the fact that subscription-radio can exists in the US says more about the low quality of "normal" radio then the fact that these satellite-radios are digital.
With the exception of one packet on Ku-band which is sold as a "add on" to subscription-TV, all digital radio-broadcasts in Europe are FTA!

jd,do you wear one of them Georgia Hats? I don't wear a hat at all.It is rainy weather here today and I do own an old raggity pith helmet hat I use for a mini umbrella for when I take my doggy out in the the front yard if it's raining.That Bell South woman who is buying the house next door to me told me on Friday evening (when I took my doggy out in my front yard for a few minutes) that she is going to try to get her camping trailer over to the house next door to me that she is buying and live in the trailer while she is working on the house.I haven't seen her since last Friday.I think she is all alone because every time she is over there she is all by herself.Next time I see her over there,I am going to offer to help her work on her house.Her Bell South uniform is a black shirt with the Bell South logo thingy on the shirt and tan trousers,I think she works in a Bell South office somewhere around here.Her face looks sort of like Opie Taylors face and she wears eyeglasses.

Roger Nash Baldwin was born in Wellesley, Massachusetts to Frank Fenno Baldwin and Lucy Cushing Nash. He earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at Harvard University; afterwards, he moved to St. Louis, where he worked as a social worker and became chief probation officer of the St. Louis Juvenile Court. He also co-wrote Juvenile Courts and Probation with Bernard Flexner at this time; this book became very influential in its era, and was, in part, the foundation of Baldwin's national reputation.

In St. Louis, Baldwin was also greatly influenced by the radical social movement of the anarchist Emma Goldman; he joined the Industrial Workers of the World, and developed a lasting sympathy for the Soviet Union and Communism that lasted until 1939, when he was disillusioned by the Nazi-Soviet pact and broke off all radical ties.
In 1927 he visited the Soviet Union and published a book, entitled Liberty Under the Soviets, which contained extensive praise for the country he later denounced.

Baldwin was a lifelong pacifist; he was a member of the American Union against Militarism, which opposed World War I, and spent a year in jail as a conscientious objector rather than submit to the draft. It was out of the American Union against Militarism (specifically, its legal arm, the National Civil Liberties Bureau) that the ACLU formed after the war, with Baldwin as its first executive director.

As director, Baldwin was integral to the shape of the association's early character; it was under Baldwin's leadership that the ACLU undertook some of its most famous cases, including the Scopes Monkey Trial, the Sacco and Vanzetti murder trial, and its challenge to the ban on James Joyce's Ulysses. Baldwin retired from the ACLU leadership in 1950, but remained active in politics for the rest of his life.

In 1947 General Douglas MacArthur invited him to Japan to foster the growth of civil liberties in that country, where he founded the Japan Civil Liberties Union and was awarded the Order of the Rising Sun by the Japanese government. In 1948, he was invited to Germany and Austria for similar purposes.

You know my preferences are for the GT series in economy mics, but I do like a good German sound when it's practical. Germans like their audio the way they like their women: Big Bottom. But I've got to agree with you on the Milab products. Big bang for the buck. My first contact with Milab was when I set up my independent room in Texas in the early 80's. Cheaper than the AKG's at that point and far less picky about staging. Marshalls I can take or leave. Although I buy their shock mounts by the bucket for field work. They work and they're not expensive. When one or two walk away at the end of a show, it's not a great loss.

And to at least pay lip service to the group topic, SW broadcasters, as a general rule, excluding Weiner and the spate of religious broadcasters out there, tend to have a better mic technique than domestic broadcasters. VOA, BBC, CBC, RA, RNZ, RNW, and especially DW work a discreet distance from the mic, in an acoustically smooth room.

It's for small details like that that DRM would be of advantage: to finally get to receive and appreciate the effort they put into their audio.

Does it work well? Perhaps this is the source of the reception problems you've been having.

Flintknapper Said

It is my understanding that at least 35 US states now have CCW, allowing private citizens without a criminal record to carry concealed firearms. I also understand that crime has been decreasing in the US for the best part of 10 years straight. Coincidence?

Australia brought in 'tough gun laws' about 10 years ago, and crime substantially INCREASED.

The UK banned private ownership of handguns in about 1997, again, crime increased.

Perhaps the issue isn't quite as straight forward as you think

SALT SAID

It seems obvious that our police should know about your stats that proves the Crime in Australia "substantially INCREASED" (your words) when tougher gun laws were introduced.

I believe that you should also advise all the politicians about these figures also: as it is a obvious way to reduce crime by letting the people get their guns back, that is.

Could you please advise us the details of the increased crime to help us prove your point. We can all then take your details to our politicians and get our guns back after the next election.

I've had the SW 07 for over 4 years, and it works great for me--I use it in the evenings--I sleep with it and I get pretty good reception just with the regular antenna. My only critisism is that the reception isn't good using USB--but since I don't use that often (usually use LSB if I'm listening to the hams) it's not a real serious issue.

I also have the SW 100--and actually I think the reception on LSB is better with this radio.

I like things as portable as possible and that's why I have both these small radios--I've taken both of them on trips and their very small size makes them easy to pack.

I suppose that if my money tree in the backyard were to fruit, I'd get a tabletop model, but since it hasn't yet, I'm happy with what I have now/

Your typical USA radio studio is way too dead. An RT60 of around 600 ms makes a voice spring into life. And if there must be a desk it should be treated and trapped if necessary. A lot of rooms could be helped tremendously by ripping out the rug and adding a bass trap.

It's much easier at Air America to keep their message on point; they

So it would be ok with you that after they installed a dictatorial government and their ruler turned out to be anti-American. After all, it's their governement. Shit, Saddam and Iraq had a government too, but we only

I never felt ill at ease being a Christian at school, because all the

How exactly are they being cleansed? By only teaching things like math, reading, geography? School is for learning. If they wany faith, there's plenty of time before school, after school and on weekends.

But it's not about free expression of faith when somebody with a differeing religion can't say, hey I wan to pray to say the pledge of allegiance to LOL, comparing a DX160 to an HF150 is like comparing a 1970's pinto(the 160) to a 1990's Honda Civic. You have to at least a certain level of performance, and the 160..doesn't.

I have had radios that reeked for YEARS, not days. My R71A still stinks badly after nearly a complete disassembly and cleaning. I still can't take being near it for too long, once it warms up, it's bad..

I had a mint Yaesu FRG-7700 that was so loaded with smoke residue that it was ORANGE. I just thought it was the odd lighting at the hamfest that made it look like that. I took it all apart and ended up washing the case in the dishwasher (came out great, and grey again) and the front panel in a pan with dishwashing soap in it. After soaking for an hour, it looked like I had dunked it in coffee. I changed the water and did it again, and it still looked like coffee. The third time, it didn't change much, and I took a washcloth and wiped everything off and dunked it again, and it turned brown instantly again. The washcloth looked like I had wiped orange paint off something. After hours, it was finally clean..

After all that, it still stunk of cigarettes, slightly as soon as it was turned on.

Smoking is something I'll never understand..

I'd never use an ammonia/water solution that was very strong, or scrubbed in vigorously, but I have been using that on every kind of plastic case for years and have had no problems at all. I did stress that the rag must be wrung out thoroughly, but I should have stressed that it should be a mild solution to begin with, yeah.

My experience is that most radio studios are way too live. WNIB even had cinderblock walls and the equipment racks didn't help, either. For a classical music station it was quite the contrast in experiences. But where there is a dead room, it's usually to allow the talent's traditionally bad mic technique without too much room noise.

And yes, the desk needs to be treated, as well.

I've had minimal luck at radio with bass traps. Owing mostly to the talent's horrible mic technique. And Manglement's disdain for the concept of acoustics. It's always the same question: Can't you fix that with an equalizer?

One GM's idea was to moved the studio into a 12 X 12 X 8 room with sheetrock walls covered in cart racks. Can you say 'resonance?' His thinking was "symmetry rules."

The money he spent on that one was huge.

The biggest challenge I had was building a theatre in Texas. We converted an unused high school gymnasium for local productions. Appropriately, our first production was a radio drama for Halloween that went out on the local full service station. The local Jr College theatre department took the one time production and expanded it into a running soap opera like "Westway" on BBC.

Yeah, I can see how a mother trying to end a war that cost her son's life can be equated with a televangelist that shows his Christian side by advocating murder.

The rough edges on cinderblocks are pretty useless (as is Sonex foam).
For a rough surface to be useful it needs to have bigger bumps (like RPG diffusers). A Helmholtz resonator can be hidden in a wall. An empty bass-reflex speaker cabinet with the holes covered (but not the port) can be tucked away under the desk. It helps.

http://forum.studiotips.com/viewtopic.php?p=5570

The deader the room, the harder it is to hear. I hate dead rooms. I have no drapes, no carpet; all tile and hardwood floors.

You'll note Radio Moscow was legendary for their ability to modulate and their studios were very alive.

I do not use equalizers or electronic reverb. It's all about the room and the way the microphone and the source relates to the room.

I returned it for a working unit. It's a nice sounding, stylish radio. I got it strictly for FM, as I have all sorts of LW/MW DX equipment already. I am disappointed to find the Tivoli's tuning dial misreads by about 700 khz, and that my Sony ICF-2010, using the built-in whip, is more sensitive and selective than the Tivoli. So, as far as I can tell, the only good thing about the Tivoli is the styling and sound.

I bought a Terk Q amplified antenna for the Tivoli, but the Terk is a POS. No matter how much I tweak the Terk's knobs, I can't get satisfactory reception of DX stations. It tends to overload the receiver and stations pop up on frequencies they don't belong on. Backing off the gain helps, but then all I can hear are locals. The simple wire antenna provided with the Tivoli gives cleaner reception.

I can't erect an outdoor FM antenna, so I will experiment with indoor antennas. I'll probably end up with the good old ribbon dipole.

What do you folks think would constitute an ideal stand-alone desktop FM radio (not a Hi-Fi stereo tuner) and indoor FM antenna for good FM DX and great sound? Keep in mind I can't erect an outdoor antenna. Is the Sony ICF-2010 supposed to be a good FM DX radio?

There was a lot else to his life besides those words. But that's ok if you can't refute it.

Sorry, but your point is without merit as you keep missing it. You've mentioned several times about "fewer casualties than any other war-time president" and that "more people were killed in the peacetime military than in Iraq" as a justification for the war.

That is NOT the point.

The point is that many believe this is a bogus war based on a lie and that the death of even one American youth for a lie is one too many.

How many were killed under other presidents or how many were killed in peace time or how many zoo keepers were killed while feeding the lions is totally irrelevant. Bogus is bogus and a lie is a lie. And one American for that is one too many.

That's the point.

If I may throw another possibility into the mix; the ICE 182A has worked well for me. It will not install like the others (better for beverage or inverted L) but it has held up well to the difficult Southern California weather. Have not looked inside to verify the quality of materials - but many others on the ng have also found it to be a good performer.

Where it says,The Daily Mississippian - Local law enforcement to use new scanner.
A little while ago Geraldo Rivera on Fox tv news was talking to some law enforcement officiers in Texas about them not being on the same frequencies and a lack of communications.Last year Mississippi spent a lot of money on new radio equipment and scanners so all of the law enforcement folks in Mississippi will all be on the same radio frequencies.Last year during the hurricane season the Sheriff departments and Police departments had some problems with communicating with each other.The new radio equipment and scanners are helping to solve that problem.Money very well spent and it will help to save lives.

Once again sparky, the Democrats aren't voting as a block on this one. Some are voting for him, others aren't. Maybe you are too dense to get that.
Some have decided that he's ok, others that he isn't. Maybe as a right

You win!!!! The Republicans are saints because they don't vote against judicial nominees!!! Hey, all the Republicasn do is bitch and moan about the judges and courts because they dare render verdicts thay they don't like. If we could just install robotic judges that gave verdicts that leaned right all the time we'd be a-ok.

So sparky, when's the parade to honor these upstanding and moral Republicans?

He didn't visit NORAD, he visited Northern Command. NORAD is in Cheyenne Mountain, Northern Command is at Peterson Airforce Base.

They were arrested for looking suspicious because they dare take down the licenses number of a federal agents car. Can you imagine that in AMerica it has come to that? Two guys got arrested because they said for a distance to Cheney "Fuck yourself" . Hey, in America, if the guys in power don't like your message you just silence them by arresting them. But you must think that freedom os speech is a quaint, but unimportant thing.

We basically defeated most of the Japanese and German military in a couple

So wait, if I like it that we defeated the Taliban in Afghanistan, that means I am in support of Bush. You know, I can say I am happy for us that we got the Taliban, and at the same time realize that Iraq was a bad idea. That's your problem jd, you think that somebody can be just one thing or another. I can't support one war and be against another? You think that we all must be for every single war no matter what happens, or who is leading it, or however foolish it is? You keep evading this point. Because I am anti Bush, you think that means I am in favor of failure in Iraq. Or that I am in favor of failure in Afghanistan. That's not the case. I was no fan of Bush when we invaded Afghanistan, but I thought it was the right thing to do and he made a good case for it. I was still no friend of George when we invaded Iraq, and I was certainly doubtful of it but thought that they had made a good case for the WMD so I supported it inititally. Then we invaded and no WMD were to be found. I felt that the administration had lied to us, and I felt Bush had not been right in sending us to war when we were in no immediate treat. Ever since then I have seen the war as a disaster. Bad intelligence, bad preperation, no exit strategy, and a President who took opprotunity to use it to further his political career. He's just a ploitician and doesn't care. He certainly is not fiscally conservative, and if you didn't know who he was you'd blame him for being a Democrat with his big spending big government initiatives. He uses God and whatever else he can get to garner votes for his elections. He's a plain old ploitician. Nothing more. And I believe he cares very little about the Iraqi people, only to the extent that it furhters his agenda.

Because no one has investigated this Whitehouse. And why hasn't that happened jd? Because of politics. Investigate the Whitehouse and you'll start finding the facts to who knew what. But go stick your head in the sand and tell me again "Well the Democrats knew the same stuff too!" Well, I bet things were conveniently left out of the briefings they got. But we'll never know any of this because no one in Washington who can do anyhtign about it has investigated it.

Well,maybe the Select-A-Tenna I bought for about $57.00 eight years ago from ccrane company was a dud and the Tiny Tenna I bought for about $10.00 about nine years ago was a dud too.I am not interested in trying out those brand names of antennas again and neither am I interested in trying out Sangean radios again either.They are not going to bite me ever again.

>You're not matching the wire to the radio. You're matching the wire to >the coaxial cable. It makes a huge difference.

But still rarely enough to improve the actual s/n ratio. But in my original post, I was implying the use of the random direct with no coax used. Unless there is a reason to remote the feedpoint, IE: to escape a noisy house, there is little need to use the coax feed. But even with the coax feed, the chances of coax loss reducing the s/n level on HF is pretty rare for a decent radio. But of course, this will depend on the coax used also. Most of mine is 213, which is fairly low loss, even with a mismatch. rg-58 would not fare quite as well on the upper bands, although I still doubt it would lose s/n unless super long, or old, etc..
With my IC-706mk2g, and my multiple paralleled dipoles, there is no HF frequency where it helps my s/n ratio to use matching from the antenna to the coax, or to use my tuner.
Even on 10m, I have plenty of background noise present when I have the antenna connected.
The only band that is improved using a tuner, is 160m.
In that case, the tuner does act to reduce MW strength to the radio, which reduces images across 160m.
Sure, using matching will often boost the level you see to the radio. But as long as you had background noise present with no signal, the noise increases at the same level as the desired signals. There is no change in s/n ratio. The meter is just pumped up...

In this case..
>I've been using the Palomar MLB with 82ft of random wire over my house with >a dedicated ground on my R-75 for a couple years now. The MLB makes a >dramatic difference in the noise level while increasing the signal strength >anywhere on the SW spectrum.

I don't know what a "MLB" is... A tuner I assume? Or maybe a preselector?
This is unrelated to the need for impedance matching a random wire to a coax feed.
In your case, you are either cleaning up a radio with a preselector, or you are using some method that provides better decoupling of the feedline.

A ground in itself means nada. Ground is a noise source actually.
But using ground as the shield connection to a coax fed random wire can improve decoupling of the feedline.

This is what is lowering noise, NOT the improved match. Or at least, as far as s/n ratio on HF is concerned. If using matching actually improves the s/n ratio, either #1, the radio is half dead, or very cheap, or #2, the coax is super lossy, long length, etc... But it would have to be some really dead coax on HF. The lower the freq, the less the loss per foot. On the lower HF bands, the loss of coax is very low. Approaching ladder line standards
nearly... You can have a real high SWR, and it ain't gonna kill you.
Impedance matching should never be confused with decoupling the antenna from the feedline. Totally unrelated. You can have a high SWR, and have real good decoupling, or visa versa. Or backwards... Again the two are totally unrelated. It's the decoupling of the feedline that is what actually benefits most SWL'ers. Not the improved match. The improved match is overkill in 95% of the cases. Not to say it can't be used for the max transfer of power, but just saying it's almost never actually neccessary for good reception on a decent radio.

>Seems like a lot of people are missing out on >some good dx and a generally more pleasant to listen to radio because they >have not tried this minor purchase.

I'm not one of them. I use only balanced wire antennas. Mostly dipoles.

But also a large yagi on the upper HF bands. I can hear stuff on that beam, many people would likely drool over, if they are using just random wires.
To me, a random wire is a generally poor design, and something I'd only use as a last resort. Not saying they aren't quite usable for general
SWL use, but they can be improved on fer sure... Just a balanced dipole is a big improvement in general over a random wire in general operation, ease of decoupling, etc... And as a bonus, you don't need a ground connection for proper operation. Anywhere. Antenna, feedline, or radio.

:)
All verticals I use, have ground radials, etc, and are also "complete" antennas.

The links I provided point to the only SW DRM concept radio that I know of other than rack mount units.

The rest need a computer to process the audio.

The one SW concept radio I pointed to can not run on batteries.

The statements that I have seen before about DRM being an open standard are as far as I see false because the software is not in the public domain.

For this among other reasons the name "Deception Radio Mondiale" sticks.

Now you have heard the rest of the story... for now at least.

5224. Two Magnetic Longwire Baluns (MLB)s : Palomar MLB-1 and RF Systems MLB

US,
Here are my thoughts on the Palomar MLB-1 and RF Systems MLB; which are commonly called Magnetic Longwire Baluns (MLB)s.
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5439
Two Magnetic Longwire Baluns (MLB)s : Palomar MLB-1 and RF Systems MLB
I have used both but not in the same location at the same time.
The Palomar MLB-1 is the easier to Mount and Rig of the two.
Simply use the Eye-Hook for Mounting and Rigging and the Tag-Wire to connect the Wire Antenna Element.
The more common Mounting method for the RF Systems MLB is to use a Hose Clamp around the large outer body to hold it in place.
The Wire Antenna Element can be connected using an Eye-Terminal or simply Soldering the Antenna Wire and bending it around the Antenna Terminal.
TIP - If either of these MLBs are used in an Inverted "L" Antenna :
The body of the MLB can be mounted directly on the Top of the Ground Rod with a Hose Clamp. (Leave about One Foot (1') of the Ground Rod sticking out above Ground Level.) Connect a very short Ground Wire from the Ground Rod to the Coax Cable's PL-259 Plug once it is installed on the MLB. Use a Dog Bone or other Insulator with one end Rigged to the Ground Rod. Rig the Bottom-end of the Wire Antenna Element to the un-used-end of the Dog Bone and then connect the Tag-end of the Wire Antenna Element to the MLB. This method of Mounting and Rigging the will Secure and provide Strain-Relief for both the MLB and the Bottom-End of theWire Antenna Element.
TESTING - Magnetic Longwire Baluns (MLB) Performance Side-by-Side :
Anyone got the time to do a Side-by-Side Test of the two ?
It would be interesting to run these two MLBs Side-by-Side with identical Inverted "L" Antenna Elements and Coax Cable Feed-in-Lines.
Either - Two shorter and lower 15 Foot Vertical by 30 Foot Horizontal Inverted "L" Antennas. (45 Foot Total)
Or - Two longer and higher 35 Foot Vertical by 70 Foot Horizontal Inverted "L" Antennas. (105 Foot Total)
[Maybe something in between 45' and 105' = Make Them Equal]

+ Have the Two Antenna Wire Elements 25 Feet apart and running Parallel to each other.
+ Have the Two 25 Foot Coax Cables coming out from the Radio/Receiver in a 60* "V" to two Ground Rods spaced 25 Feet apart; with a 'common' Ground {Radial} Wire connecting both Ground Rods together.
+ Use and Antenna "A" and "B" Switch to do the switching for the Side-by-Side of the Two MLBs.
+ Use a single Radio/Receiver as the "Standard" Means-of-Measurement for the Side-by-Side of the Two MLBs.
Now - Your Side-by-Side Testing can begin; care for a little AM/MW Radio Band and Shortwave Radio Bands Listening Anyone ?
There are more choices then just the Palomar MLB-1 and RF Systems MLB so called Magnetic Longwire Baluns (MLB)s.

No I don't like it. This is another computer - radio. You do realize that most of these units need a computer to operate? These are not stand alone radios. The link I provided is the one stand alone SW radio that I know about.

The other links are not SW radios or they need computers to operate or they are rack mount units that are and will continue to be very expensive. The rack mounts are not consumer units.

I don't find this humorous.
I keep to the facts and you just play around.
You don't pay attention to well either.
You ask about something I posted three times about and don't seem to understand the difference between a stand alone radio and one that needs a computer to process the audio.

The reply was in response to your statement that the software was not in public domain. Source code is available so your argument fails.

Just because the software runs on a computer today, doesn't mean it must always run on a computer. Initially MP3 encosded music only ran on a computer. Now you can easily find battery operated MP3 players.

There are some that run 70 hours on a single AAA battery. Battery life does not need to be an issue either.

Once a semiconductor manufacturer produces an ASIC for DRM it will be possible to produce battery operated radios with DRM. A receiver manufacturer could also create a custom ASIC.

Take a look at the pictures in the last link.

Anycase, here's another link from the BBC news website:
http://news.bbc.co.uk/1/hi/technology/4237010.stm

We will see by this year's end when these things are actually in the shops what the actual specifications of these radios will be.
My guess is that the number of shortwave-bands on these radios will be limited.

Of course it is. This is a reply to your comment that the source-code for the DRM SDRs is not available. It is and it is GPLed.

The best prove of it is HAMDRM, the version of DRM redesigned to operate in 3 Khz. Their code is based on the code of DREAM that you can find in the link I provided.

> The other links are not SW radios or they need computers to operate or > they are rack mount units that are and will continue to be very

OK. I think there was some "communication-error" between us. A "rack mountable" (to me) is a device you place inside a rack, which is usually professional equipement to be placed inside a computer or telecom-room.

(In this case, I though you talked about the "professional" DRM-receivers and DRM-monitors made by companies who also build transmittors).

A "PC-decoder" (i.e. something used by hobbyists and HAMs) I would call a "SDRs" (Software Defined Radio).

The Mayah was a halfway solution as it used a generic DSP-processor to do DRM-decoding (which explains why it use that much power). These next generation DAB/DRM radios are based on ASIC-designs.

No I don't.
I like to keep a discussion as "clean" as possible too, but I think there simply was a miscommunication between us.

But, if you use a name like 'Deception', you'll need to make sure that you can "prove" your statement. Fact is
- that "standalone" DRM-radios do exist.
- that the source-code of DRM is publically available.

I see that all you can do is reduce it down to hate instead of trying to address any of my points. I'm a Catholic. I don't hate Christians, but I do think that prayer and teaching about religion is best left up to churches and preachers than schools and teachers.

But keep up with the caveman thinking: me good, he hate, he bad.

Well, I'd argue that the police need to crack down (ie. actually detect and prosecute) drunken behavior, and close pubs which serve drunk people. That would quite seriously mean that most pubs in the Uk would be closed down, because most pubs serve people who are already drunk.

Guns aren't a problem outside a few hard-core inner-city gang areas.
There aren't any guns in town centres or suburbs, and the guns that exist in the countryside do not cause a problem.

>Actually the crime rate in GB has skyrocketed since the British people >were disarmed and lost the ability to defend themselves.
>When the citizens are armed crime plummets

Sorry, but that's bollocks. In Britain we never had the right to defend ourselves.

In the UK you only have the right to use "reasonable force" and "reasonable" is effectively defined by the judges as "none at all" since you are supposed to call the police instead. Of course the police are too busy sitting by the roadside looking for speeding motorists instead. There is no-one to defend you. If you think you are at risk, you have to stay at home. You just can't go wondering around in towns at night.

Guns are irrelevent to this issue. We never had the right to defend ourselves, at all. Whether we use carrots or biscuits or guns doesn't matter. If someone attacks you, you are NOT allowed to attack back.

At no point did the UK ever have a town gun culture. At no point was violent crime ever kept under control by British citizens carrying guns.

Increased firearms control was brought in to prevent mass murders, killing sprees by madmen, which was a problem in the 1990s. There was never an issue with the general town populace owning guns because there was never a culture of popular gun ownership in the UK.
Subsequent madmen have used swords or machettes to carry out killing sprees, but these sprees have been slower and killed less people, and more to the point the madmen are fairly easy for police marksmen to take down.

Handgun firearms are completely banned, but rifles and shotguns can be owned if you get a licence; my father-in-law has such a licence, basically all he has to do to qualify is for the police to check that he has a locked metal gun cabinet and get a note from an approved doctor to say "he's not mad". Also non-firearm guns such as "hard" air pistols are perfectly legal provided you only use them in private areas such as your own home, garden or shooting range. I know this because I own a number of "hard" air pistols myself including a rather powerful CO2 pistol which I use on my own shooting range in my own garden which points out onto empty fields with no public access. I regularly invite friends to bring along their own air pistols to shoot at metal, cardboard or china targets. My next-door neighbour uses higher-calibre air rifles to shoot rats in his chicken farm.

Most British people live in towns and have never had any exposure to guns, not before the new law, not after, not ever. The police don't usually carry guns, the people don't usually carry guns, the criminals don't usually carry guns. British people just don't carry guns. The only people who use guns are extreme criminal gangs, police who patrol those areas (such as airports or troublesome housing projects) and country sports shooters such as myself.

Britain never had a town gun culture. We have a drink culture.

Recently, this drink culture has got out of hand.

British town centre violence has always been about drunken fist-fights near pubs, and there are a lot of pubs so there are a lot of drunken fist-fights. The rise in violent crime is almost entirely down to extended pub/nightclub opening hours, alcohol getting cheaper and drinks getting stronger (particularly "alco-pops" such as Vodka-based fruit drinks).

British beer is typically 4% alcohol by volume, compared to American beer at 2-3% ABV. A typical young Brit will consume three or four pints of 4% beer plus one or two spirt-based fruit drinks at 5-9% ABV, on just one typical night out, and will normally go out two or three nights a week. Most young Brits live within walking distance of dozens of pubs serving these kinds of drinks until 1-2am every day of the week.

Pubs used to have to close at 11am. Now they can get around this by becoming nightclubs, or applying for an extended licence.

I'd agree, but I'd also add that generally drunken violence isn't a problem when everyone is drunk. The violence seems to occur when there are a mix of drunk and non-drunk people; typically the non-drunk people will complain about the drunk people being too noisy or rowdy, this then develops into an argument, the drunk people start pushing and poking, then the drunk people start fighting.

As a non-drinker I find it easier just not to enter towns after 9pm. I don't find rowdy behaviour acceptable (for instance, drunk people bumping in to me, manhandling my wife, shouting obscenities), so I tend to complain about it, this often kick-starts violence.

Also I've noted that drunk people just do not notice (or do not remember) violent behaviour by their friends.

This may just be Cheltenham, Tewkesbury, Bridgnorth, Gloucester, Birmingham, London, Coventry and every other town I've ever been out in; Glasgow may be different.

There was this old churchyard that had been abandoned and overgrown.
The church authorities hired a new gardener. Six months later, a new vicar visited the churchyard which had been transformed into a landscaped vision of beauty.

"You and God have created a wonderful churchyard!" said the vicar.

"Yeah, well, you should have seen the mess when it was just God", said the gardener.

I've used two sets of NIMH batteries and a wall-wart recharger to keep the DE1103 going with no problems. A charge doesn't hold as long as a good set of alkalines, but I can get about 20 hours and the overall cost is much lower.

I think the old guy in Northern England lived out in the Country when he shot the burgler with his Shotgun.How long do you think it would take the cops to get over to his house? What if his phone line wasen't working and his neighbors lived too far away to call? In an emergency,seconds count,often a split second counts.Pick up your phone and see how long it takes for the cops to get to your home.There is a Police Precint behind Metrocenter Mall www.metromalljackson.com just down JR Lynch Road behind the Mall,about four or five blocks from me,(the Precint is,the front entrance to the Sears store at the Mall is 275 footsteps from my front door) I suppose the cops could get over here in about five minutes,but if I lived further away,it would take longer for them to get over here.Cops can't be everywhere all the time.

You might be surprised. From what I remember living on the East Coast, reception was much better there, with just a plain 50' wire attached right to the antenna of the Astronaut-8 or the 1940's Zenith Transoceanic - no transformer. Here in California, we get major Pacific Rim stuff really well, but the rest of the world - even the big boys - are true DX. Europe is tough under all but the very best circumstances. Even South America takes some work, and you'd think they'd be easier (they were easier, from New England). Africa and Central Asia, strangely, do better than Europe at certain times of day, but it still is heavily dependent on the perfect conditions for intelligibility.

Another thing that I have to deal with is a noise level about 6 s-units higher than rural New England ever was. David may have a comparable problem. When I see posts from Telamon or Stewart McKenzie, I don't usually see tough DX, but more likely powerhouses that can make it over the tough noise. Maybe they do tough DX, but their reports and comments usually show more powerful stations. If I could away from the City, better results might be in the offing.

I've managed to get some pretty weak stations here at my suburban QTH, but it takes a lot of work and aspirin to get there. Maybe what makes a difference is whether your goal is to simply ID a station positively (which in itself can be a task), or to listen for content - IMO, far more difficult. Spanish or Pidgin is a lot easier to understand when it is intelligible, of course.

I'd love to try my setup back at your place in MI. I bet I'd have a lot better fortunes there, just as I did in New England.

There are curfews in some towns over here because of hurricane Katrina and hurricane Rita.Otherwise,you can go into any towns in U.S.A.at any time of the day and night.There are Pubs here in Jackson too,but they all seem safe enough.I do my beer drinking at home because that is my preference.There are four or five stripclubs in Jackson too and they also sell booze,but I haven't been to any of them yet and I probally wont either,at my age,I am not too interesting in looking at them wimmins stripping,although they are topless clubs only.I prefer to be at home before it gets dark because that has always been my preference.

I have a train to catch in half an hours so just a quick message before I get out of here:

Well, as the British say "the proof of the pudding is in the eating", the best way is to try it yourself.

But, for there are some indications about the possibility on the website of Chris Mackerell in New Zealand. He has some interesting audio-samples online: http://www.owdjim.gen.nz/chris/radio/DRM/

Including a repport of the number of audio-frames received and the audio of it. (the only thing that I find a pitty is that these audio-samples have been compress a second time using a lossy codec, creating a "codec cascade" effect).

There are examples with a lot of packetloss and some with excellent reception; some from as far as Europe (20000 km from New-Zealand).

But, the best it to try it out yourself. (but I don't have a DRM radio neither, so who am I to say what you should do. :-)))

Most new older style rechargable batteries need to be conditioned first before regular use.They should be fully charged up and then put in a flashlight and leave the flahlight turned on untill the batteries completly drain down and do the same thing again a couple of times or otherwise they will devlope a memory and will not fully recharge again.Once a month,they should be fully drained down again and fully recharged at least once to keep them in good working condition.NiMH and some other types of rechargable batteries are different and do not develope a memory.Always read the instructions that came with the rechargable batteries or the battery charger.

Bush wanted the war in the first place. It's not that the House or Senate said, hey let's go invade Iraq, are you up for it Goerge?

Nobody has been held accountable for the "bad" intelligence. Bush never took anybody to task for it. It looks like he coneveniently let it slide because it furthered his agenda.

Hi Zappa

When I bought my Lowe HF-150, it needed 8 batteries to power it for outside use. There was no way I was going to buy batteries every couple days for it. So, I bought this 8 way battery recharger and picked up a deal on 20 or 24 2100Mah batteries for it. The 2100's were the not the best, 2300 was the best at the time, but I found the 2100 to be just as good for the money.

I figured out the premium for the 2300s over the 2100s were not worth it. But this was like 6 months ago. I'm sure prices have changed since then.

Not that much longer lasting power in the 2300s over the 2100s for me anyway.

Check out this guys store. He has LOTS of rechargers and battery combo deals. I bought my 8 way recharger on it's own. Don't know if he still lists the recharger alone anymore. But still, take this auction for instance. It's not a bad deal. It charges both cads and NiMH's.
5 hours for cads, 8 hours for Nih. So charge 4 while you're using the other 4. He also has, 4 and 10 way rechargers and various others.

--Mike L. <

Absolutely - first a big horizontal loop that I can build pretty cheaply, just a matter (now) of finding the time and proper routing. It will necessarily include my entire house within the loop, including part of the support structure, so I am hoping for the best but expecting the mediocre.

Then, if all else fails, trying out a commercial small amplified vertical loop, like the Wellbrook.

I do use a dipole that works pretty well on the higher bands (11 MHz and up), and since installing a transformer on my random wire I've noticed a slight decrease in noise on that aerial - but it ain't enough. I am surrounded by RF junkola, some of which will never go away (like high-voltage lines front and back yards and splattery 50 kW MW transmitters a couple miles away, gushing harmonics like a fountain).

Try hooking the receiver chassis up to an earth ground. If it's just a two pin plug on the wall wart, the receiver is floating, ie. connected via stray capacitance to all the crud coming in over the power line.

The battery clip on the ground end, or the outside of an earphone or antenna jack are places to try. (I don't have that radio, anybody have a service manual and can make a better suggestion?).

5280. The "Slinky" Sloper Antenna ! - Will the Angle of the Dangle . . . cause a Commotion in the Trans-Ocean DX ?

Greg - There You Go Again - The "Slinky" Sloper Antenna !
Will the Angle of the Dangle . . .
cause a Commotion in the Trans-Ocean DX ?
http://groups.yahoo.com/group/Shortwave-SWL-Antenna/message/5447
Basics - The standard Full Size Slinky has about 100 Turns with a Diameter of 2 3/4 Inches and a Circumference of 8.64 Inches for a Total Wire Length of 72 Feet.
How Long Does It Get ? - I Calculate that the Optimum*
"Stretched-Out" Length of a Slinky would be about 22.9 Feet.
* Note - Based on the "Spacing" of the Coil being 'equal'
to the Diameter of the Coil.
THE "SLINKY" SLOPER ANTENNA :
A simple single (1) "Slinky" Sloper set at a 45* Angle would have about a 16 Foot Ground Foot-Print with a Height of about 17 Feet (16+1) with a Ground Level Feed-Point starting at a Ground Rod with the Top about One Foot (1') above ground level.
? ? ? What About Super Sizing It ! ! !
The Super Size "Slinky" Sloper Antenna would be made of Three (3) Slinkys set at a 45* Angle would have about a 48 Foot Ground Foot-Print with a Height of about 50 Feet
(48+1) with a Ground Level Feed-Point starting at a Ground Rod with the Top about One Foot (1') above ground level.
TIPS :
- Use a 9:1 Matching Transformer (UnUn) between the Coax Cable Feed-in-Line with your Sloper Antenna for better Shortwave Listening use.
- Feed the Slinky Sloper from the Far-End with a remotely located Ground Rod and the Coax Cable directly underneath the Slinky on the ground or buried under the ground.
FWIW - One advantage of the Sloper Antenna Design is that it only requires One "Elevated" Mounting Point to Rig the Antenna Element along with a ground level mounting point.

This summer was pretty good up here, but the autumn is starting to suck.

What hours are you listening? The Beeb is coming in pretty good on 7160 at 9 AM PDT, and is still there at 10:30.

Poland is brave as well:

Jellied Cow's Foot
(Called "nozki" in Polish). Buy a cow's foot in a butcher shop, chop it up and cook for hours & hours in water with spices, garlic, salt, pepper, etc. It is a good idea to evacuate the house during cooking time to avoid the overwhelming smell. Then pour this mess into a large flat pan and refrigerate. It sets

That is the real Haggis.I have been knowing for many years there are different varieties of Haggis that are made/prpared differently than real Haggis for people with more "delicate" stomachs or for people who want to pretend they are eating real Haggis.I must admit I have never tried any kinds of Haggis begore,but as long as it is prepared properly,I don't see anything at all wrong with it.I would like to try some real Haggis myself.There is an Irish Pub (Fenian's Pub on Fortification Street) in down town Jackson,maybe somebody there knows somebody who cooks up some Haggis once in a while,I better check that out pretty soon. www.devilfinder.com Old Southern Haggis Recepies

Hard to tell. It just could have been one heck of a storm that looked like a great flood to the story teller on the ground because he didn't have a weather channel and sattelites to get a big picture. Or it could have been an allegorical folk story with some meaning beyond the literal.

Well, was it the "Best" [?]

There have been two or three hardcover books on the Best-Sellers list by highly placed government officials, up to Cabinet level (hopefully slightly better sources than the "Enquirer") that said that W had his sights set on Iraq from his first week in office, well before this so-called intelligence came about.

Furthermore, some have said that this "intelligence" was just "telling the boss what he wanted to hear" (nudge nudge, wink wink). Or nobody wanting to risk their (very high paying) job and career by telling the Emperor that he had no clothes. Having spent 33 years in industry, I truly have seen this happen more than once, and with "bosses" that were waaay less powerful than the POTUS. The intelligence folks knew this was W's pet project from Week 1 (and being highly politically driven, it's not out of the realm of reasonableness for them to have "told him what he wanted to hear"). So, maybe not the "Best". Maybe, dare I say it, disingenuous at best or a lie at worst.

Next...

So then, are you implying that we should perpetuate the mistake of having the wrong war in the wrong country for the wrong reason by continuing to sacrifice American lives and arms and legs now that we do know things we did not know then?

If I may interject a comment here: It was the executive branch that examined the intelligence. More than one insider has said it looked as if the prez was only looking for intelligence that would support his wish to go to war with Iraq. At any rate, Bush made his case to the legislature. Senators and congressmen accepted what Bush presented. At least one senator, John Kerry, said this is not a time for partisan bickering, this is a time to get behind the president. The House and Senate voted to back the prez based on what he had presented to them. Later, when Kerry discovered how flawed that intelligence was, he said, had he known it at the time, he would not have voted in favor of the war. (Conservatives jumped on this candid comment as evidence of "flip-flopping".)

Doubt the Allegory part..

Do wonder about Ezekiel's Wheels and Noah's Ark..
Did the wheel land, and were the people led into it's cavernous Maw..

- were they both partial accounts of Alien spacecraft abducting Human beings..

and Did the aliens wear the Sinister Blue Helmets of the United Nations..

Connect the dots.. the story's right there....

- we just need some Genius out there to translate it all and broadcast the story On Shortwave radio

The Terk AM Loop is not amplified - it is a passive antenna. It works very well with my Sony portables as well as the "Recepter". Avoid the Terk AM/FM loop as I heard it is not as good.
Amplified antennas (pre-amps), like the Terk Q, in general are prone to overloading the front end of most receivers.
I never use them unless I'm working OSCAR satellites :-)

They weren't and that's the thing. Secret Service went after them a while later after they left the area. They were detained and then let go. Just because they decided to use their right to free speech.

When Cheney uses his free speech, it's ok though.

It's not too hard to see the death toll and understand that terrorists are

It's not vengence, it's justice. If you consider it vengence then that's your problem.

And once again, no one here cares about the Afghani people. Go take a poll

According to you the Global War on Terror is invading wherever we damn please, for whatever damn reason, under the guise of promoting Democracy.
So how many wars will we be in jd? 20? 50? 100? You tell me how many we need and how many American soldiers have to die to make you feel better.

I understand that we are invading countries based on faulty intelligence and then covering our asses by saying how wonderful it is we are giving them the prize of Democracy.

Honestly jd, tell me a country that doesn't have WMD, doesn't pose an immediate threat and then ask people if you think we should invade those countries because it gives them Democracy and in some oblique way helps in the war on terror. Go ahead and name some countries and tell me how close we are in invading them.

The other "reasons" didn't constitute an immediate threat, so didn't make

I didn't see it, but that sure sounds more like the "Weekly World News". In the late fifties/early sixties, yeah - that would have been the Enquirer. But in the last fifteen or twenty years, the "front page photos" of a B-17 on the moon, Clinton and an alien arm-in-arm chatting, the "half boy/half bat" child born in Armpit, Alabama - that has been the "Weekly World News" usually. Just the covers are great entertainment while waiting your turn in a crowded checkout lane at the supermarket.

We used to be a nation of rebels. The revolutionary war was a great show of

I have decided to start a new net....I pick 14.321. I will be replaying ARRL bulletins and information from RAIN. Then claim it as original. I will also be using a prompt from Walter Cronkike, even tho his lawyers asked me to stop.

Then if anyone interferes with me I will send out "Felony affidavits".

If he made a statement of fact, then you lied about him telling a lie. That would give lie to you calling me a liar for calling him a liar for giving a statement of fact. But far be it from me to point that out! I'm content to

I recently purchased an Icom 756 Pro II for both ham and especially for use as a serious SWL DX radio. I am looking for other Pro II users who also do serious shortwave Dxing with this rig.
My question is what settings do you find as most optimal on Filter 1,2 and 3 for DXing?
Any other tips that improve SWL DXing on this rig would be greatly appreciated.

I'm not playing any more of your yes it is and no it isn't crap. The link above points to the same radio the other links you provided already show that this is NOT A SW RADIO. It's AMBCB and FM like the rest. Now I've lost count of how many times I have posted - the one I showed you is the ONLY DEMONSTRATION SW DRM RADIO IN ANY OF THE LINKS.

The few other exceptions are very expensive professional rack mount OR computer based processing. You have not made one point in regurgitating the DRM consortiums press releases. I've already read them and I don't need you to point me to them. It would be OK if the links proved your assertions but they don't.

The computer software down load gives you TEMPORARY and not PERMANENT use. The rights are NOT given away with this software. This is just one of the deceptions about DRM is that the coding is free and anybody can use it as see fit. If you can't see that then to bad for you.

You are full of crap and I'm not playing your Trolling game.

You do not have the rights to the software, those rights are reserved.
For the time being you can down load and compile it on a local machine for your own use. If the rights holder tell you to stop using it then that's it. If money is demanded then you will have to pay it. There are many ways this can be enforced.

There is one stand alone demonstration radio. I provided the link to it.
The others are multi kilo buck professional rack mount units that consumers are not going to buy. All the other links by the DRM Troll point to AMBCB and FM NOT SW RADIOS or computer assisted radios.

So the argument that "DRM consumer penetration into SW" is false.

Yeah that's the no brainer requirement it will take to create a radio that will operate on batteries. Make no mistake about this, battery life will be shorter than the current generation radios.

So who do you think is going to spend hundreds of thousands of dollars to make ASIC's to do this?

Both above are short-wave. Of course, SW could mean software and that adds a politics was most interesting - thanks to Kristoff for initiating it. It

Yeah, it looks a lot better than the piece of crap radios the DRM Troll Availability for development and beta testing is not the same as public domain. The source code is not available for unrestricted use.

Like iBiquity, use of DRM source code in distributed products, commercial or otherwise, incurs license fees, which can be costly. On both transmission and reception ends.

> Just because the software runs on a computer today, doesn't mean it must > always run on a computer. Initially MP3 encosded music only ran on a Good case in point. You are aware that Thomson/Fraunhofer receives a royalty on every MP3 player sold. MP3 is a licensed technology. And early on, MP3 was not inexpensive. My first MP3 encoder cost more than $300. "Professional" versions (feature sets for heavy users in commercial environments) could cost twise that. Though not so costly today, they're still not free.

But MP3 had wide application in general market audio file transmission/reception at a time when such technology solved problems faced by large numbers of users on street level that were not solvable by other means at the time.

For DRM, also a licensed technology, like the wire recorder, which also met street level users' needs, there are already technologies in place and in use that meet the same user expectations or better for the same money or less, while presenting greater convenience than current DRM receivers allow.

Whether or not DRM, or iBiquity, take off remains to be seen, but the outlook is questionable. The technical advantages against competing technologies are, at best, minimal. The technical obstacles are many. And the costs for both broadcasters and listeners are high.

And the public are uninterested.

As with AM Stereo, there is no public clamor for these technologies to be widely implemented. If the public were to make such noise, there would be nothing to stop the tidal wave of implementation. Because there would be money in it. Large money.

Returning to the example of MP3, there was public and professional demand for smaller audio files due to the high cost of storage and the limited transmission rates available at the time. MP3 met this handily. Today, with storage cheap and transmission rates high, MP3 is more of an institution than a necessity. As evidenced by the number of portable players that now embrace uncompressed files.

But for now, there is no public clamor for DRM. And absent a regulatory mandate, without a public demand there is no motivation for implementation.

The market driven future for DRM, and iBiquity, is dim.

The software does not have to be in the public domain for the standard to be open. The standard is one thing, the software is an implementation of the standard. I can write software that complies with an open standard and sell it without putting the source in the public domain.

If you follow the requirements of the GPL, then the rights holder won't tell you to stop using it.

If money is demanded then you will have to pay it.
Per the GPL, any money is for distribution costs. Since the links were for a free download site, there is no cost, now or in the furute.

Yes, but you would have to violate the terms of the GPL.

You argue that DRM is primarily limited to computers and that is an issue for you. I provided an example of a technology that was initially limited to computers and is now available in low cost devices that fit in a pocket. The point being, the same can happen with DRM.

You argue that the technology to turn a digital stream to audio is too power hungry for portable devices. Again, MP3 players show that this does not have to be so.

Sony could. TI could. Philips could. Analog Devices could. If you could sell tens of thousands of them, why not. Many companies are making ASICs.

DRM uses MPEG4 AAC audio coding as one of its choices. The Apple IPOD supports MPEG4 AAC audio coding. Perhaps half the ASIC work is already done.

Hi

Thanks for the mention.

I've been watching this thread with interest, but keeping out of the "debate" :-). When I started putting my DRM recordings on my website
I was on a very expensive internet connection. It's much cheaper now, and I still have the original .wav files of most of the recordings, so I might re-encode some of the files at a higher quality.

DRM here has always been very unpredictable, because no-one beams anything our way. Mind you, the same goes for most major international broadcasters these days :-(

I understand that RNZI are currently awaiting delivery of a shipment of Sangean DRM receivers - I'll be interested to see what they are like.

This .sig file will continue until Mister Fort posts a sincere apology to all cancer victims and their families. His refusal to do so says more about his attitude and upbringing than any of his thoughtless and hurtful postings in rec.radio.shortwave. He seems to be very proud of the fact that he can buy expensive radios using the refunded deposit money from his empty beer containers and has frequently posted the fact. It appears he is well on his way to purchasing his next radio. Anyone caring about his well-being should mention the good work of Alcoholics Anonymous to him.

I've been DXing with mine about a year now and the settings I favour in SSB mode are:
Fil1 - 2.9 khz with +300 offset
Fil2 - 2.5 khz with +150 offset
Fil 3 - 2.0 khz with - 100 offset
That's for DXing AM signals in the SSB mode

Of course in AM mode the filters are fixed at 3/6/9 khz, but you can swing the passband offset in the 3 khz setting quite a lot to good effect.

In the lower tropical bands I would not use more than preamp 1 if any.

The NR noise reduction should be used judiciously - toggle it on/off to see which gives the most audible signal.

Har. I have no idea what either of those did, but the second reminds me of my first job. Our direct boss was as much of a nervous narvus as I've ever seen. The office, in the early 60s, was wired with an arrangement whereby his boss could call any one of my boss' four peers into his office using a buzzer to each of their desks.

We found we could poke a pin into the right cable against the wall and frequently set his buzzer off. Then he'd go into his boss' office and get chewed out for being an idiot for showing up when he hadn't been called.

We also found out that if you leaned back hard enough in one of the office chairs, it made nearly the same sound.

I suspect the guy could have lived a few extra years if he didn't have the four of us as his temporary summer messengers a couple of years running.

Well Danny, to start I just returned to school last year. I had attended a university once when I got out of high school which was back don't understand that if you want to make it in this world you need a

Well first off a lot of people in this area still live at home. but to anwer your question my parents are retiring a few more years and plan to move up north, while I will be given the house, it kind of like a inheritance. As I stated before I very seldom see my parents i live on Only took a day for me. The thing wasn't COVERED in ash, but it was pretty smelly. I have the case and book in there now, and I'm gonna leave it in there while I'm on vacation. I think the case and book would hold odor more stubbornly.

What's "anwer"????? Better take a remedial English course, Toadie.

Toadie is leeching off them until they croak or are in the nursing home and he gets the house.

Oh, is the basement considered the "fourth floor", Toadie? I'd stay two

LOL!

Reminds me of a childhood friend of mine whose mother was from Minnesota and made lutefisk once a year---gawd, the stink!

Lutefisk recipe:

1) Boil fish in lye (Drano)

2) Place cooked fish on pine board in basement.

3) After one month, throw out fish and eat pine board.

RHF,

Either you don't get it or I am not stating my case clearly enough.

Assuming for the moment that it is the latter, let me try and put it as simply as I can...

First, I'm not giving anybody an "automatic pass" (whatever that is).

The wrong war in the wrong country for the wrong reason has NOTHING to do with Republicrats, Democans, liberals or conservatives. Period [.]

It has everything to do with being just plain morally wrong.

One last time: kids getting maimed and killed for a lie has nothing to do with political dogma and everything to do with what one believes to be morally right.

However, if you want to brand someone a "liberal" for thinking that it's wrong for our kids to be killed for a lie, well, knock yerself out...

In Vietnam they tack a fish on a board. (I saw a lot of them over there)
The board is mounted vertically and a little strip of wood is tacked along the botton edge of the board and a can or a bottle is hung at the bottom of the board with a string or a piece of wire.They slit the bottom of the fish and they let juice of the fish run along the strip of wood that is tacked to the bottom edge of the board and drip into the can or bottle.They use the juice of the fish for flavoring food.

Memory says that God became angry and caused he flood and then later realized it was wrong so promised not to do it. This casts much doubt over the infalibility of God. God does not appear to be perfect which casts doubt on the teachings. I've been meaning to read up on it but haven't gotten around to it.

They do use premphasis with AM radio transmissions, at least in the US. The NRSC has come up with a suggested premphasis scheme:

http://www.nrscstandards.org/Standards/nrsc-1.pdf

This is NRSC 1. As I understand it, NRSC 2 is similiar, but with a a cut off to the treble boost above some frequency to reduce adjacent channel interference.

Agreed. But DRM might still have long term presence on SW. Some government which currently subsidizes SW broadcasts to tiny audiences with no certain benefit might find DRM modulation every bit as good.

As far as IBOC is concerned, I've suspected it's a scheme to get more broadcast channels on the same license. It seems they're already touting the extra channels offered by IBOC-FM as a reason to buy an IBOC radio. It wouldn't surprise me if IBOC AM also has the same capability. If they can offer some desireable programming on the IBOC sidebands, they might sell a few radios.

I think the article is at www.drudgereport.com this morning,(I didn't read the article,I don't care anything about Panda sex) about a satellite to be used to watch (spy) on Pandas having sex.Pandas are ok,but nowdays even Pandas can't have any privacy.I can think of much better things to use satellites for.

Yeah,

those were the days when T.V. was just plain wholesome and fun to watch. It was the innocent days, at least for me. I remember coming home from school and watching it with "my best friend" :)

Remember that? When you had a "best friend"? I bet some people still have a best friend. But it was not like the old days.

Yes, Don Adams humor was corny but it was fun to watch. There was nothing you had to worry about watching it. I don't remember any heavy violence or hidden political messages in it.

It sucks the bad smell out of it. It's like putting a box of it in the 'fridge.

You might try putting a box of it in your pants, it might just help if you've

I have a 1992 R8. I am considering an R8B, but:

I understand there were some refinements or improvements during the production lifetime of the "B"...

I know there are some very knowledgable people here who could list the changes and when they occurred.

I have DAGS but come up dry.

Some links, perhaps? Some serials to avoid?

Thanks!

Radio Argentina Al Exterior comes in here ay a very good level between 2200-0400 GMT with a lot of good music Brasil on 11780 between 2300-2400 GMT comes in good too with music. RAE also comes in with good signals around 1800 GMT on 15345 with plenty of Spanish music. Check out both frequencies often.

Jim and I both share a SF Bay general location, I believe. RAE has never been strong for me either, although it was better a few years ago, even when its freq was wacko and its audio screwy. Brazil on 11780, OTOH, always bangs in here L&C.

No dan, but I will talking about this weekend on my show and how people like you and your little bitches on here don't need to be amateur radio operators. I will also be talking about the CC&R rules congress is trying to pass and how if amateurs treat other amateurs like shit they really don't deserve that bill.

One time I was driving down the freeway (in my Pinto) at rush hour not really paying attention. I looked ahead and realized everyone was stopped. I hit the brakes HARD then as an afterthought, looked in my mirror. The guy behind me was not paying attention either and hadn't started braking yet. As I came up to the guy in front of me, I started to panic about the guy behind me and pulled into the center dirt area. Sure enough, the guy behind me skidded right into the car that was in FRONT of me and shoved him into the car ahead of him! I have often wondered if I would have been another Pinto statistic had I not gotten out of the way...

Reading This Will Change Your Life!!!

Imagine waking up every day knowing that you don't have any financial worries. Imagine going to bed every night feeling completely at PEACE because you and your loved ones are financially secure.

A little while back, I was browsing through a newsgroup, just like you are now, and came across an article that said you could make thousands of dollars within weeks with only an initial investment of $5.00! So I thought, "Yeah right, this must be another scam", but like most normal humans, I was curious, so I kept reading... I also did an Internet search (I did not want to be caught by another get rich quick scam), and found nothing but success stories.

It said that you should send $1.00 to each of the 5 names and addresses stated in the article. You then place your own name and address in the bottom of the list at the 5th position, and post the article in at least 200 newsgroups. (There are thousands)

No catch, that was it.

So after thinking it over, and talking to a few people first, I thought about trying it. I figured "what have I got to lose except 5 stamps and $5.00, right?" People spend $5.00 on things that bring MUCH less return than this does!

Then I invested the measly $5.00 (Yes I used the word "measly" because $5.00 really is a measly amount compared to the money I have made through my initial investment).

Well GUESS WHAT!!

... within 7-10 days, I started getting money in the mail! I was shocked! I figured it would end soon, but the money just kept coming in. This is so amazing, in my first week, I made about $25.00. By the end of the second week I was thrilled to discover that I had made a total of over $1,000.00! Oh my God, in the third week I had over $10,000.00 and it's still growing.

I Realized...This Is How Life Should Be!!
And I Guarantee You Can Live This Way Right Now!!

This is now my fourth outstanding week and I have made just over $42,000.00 and it's still coming in rapidly. It's certainly worth the $5.00, and 5 stamps, I have spent more than that on lottery tickets!! Make sure you print a copy of this article NOW, so you can get this fantastic information when you need it.

Let me tell you how this works and most importantly, why it works...

I promise you that if you follow the directions exactly, that you will start making more money than you thought possible by doing something so easy! Read this entire message carefully! (print it out or download it). Follow the simple directions and watch your money pour in! It's easy, It's legal, and...

It's The Perfect Opportunity At The Perfect Time!!
I'm Dead Serious!!

VERY IMPORTANT: This is not a rip-off; it is not indecent; it is not illegal; and it is virtually no risk - This is the best deal ever, and it really works!!! If all of the following instructions are adhered to, you will receive extraordinary dividends from an investment is only $5.00 (Plus postage).

PLEASE NOTE: Follow these directions EXACTLY, and $50,000 or more can be yours in 20 to 60 days. Don't you think it's time for your dreams to come true? It has nothing to do with luck, this is a very powerful, and truly amazing system that has proven to increase the fortunes of ordinary people time and time again.

The Bottom Line Is This

This program remains successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants. Please continue its success by carefully adhering to the instructions.
You will now become part of the Mail Order business. In this business your product is not solid and tangible, it's a service. You are in the business of developing Mailing Lists. Many large corporations are happy to pay big bucks for quality lists.

Here are the four easy steps to success:

STEP 1:

Get 5 separate pieces of paper and write the following on each piece of paper "PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST." Now get 5 US $1.00 bills and place ONE inside EACH of the 5 pieces of paper so the bill will not be seen through the envelope (to prevent thievery).

Next, place one paper in each of the 5 envelopes and seal them. You should now have 5 sealed envelopes, inside each envelope should have a piece of paper stating the phrase...

"PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR MAILING LIST."
(please add your printed name and mailing address under this phrase)

Remember: A US $1.00 bill, as payment for your name going on the mailing list, must also be in each envelope.

What you are doing is creating a service. THIS IS ABSOLUTELY LEGAL! You are requesting a legitimate service and you are paying for it! Like most of us I was a little skeptical and a little worried about the legal aspects of it all. So I checked it out with the U.S. Post Office (1-800-725-2161) and they confirmed that it is indeed legal!

Mail the 5 envelopes to the following addresses:

1) J Roth
2901 Barton Skyway 3406
Austin, TX 78746
2) Jesse James 1778 Swift Ave.
Ventura, Ca 93003
3) Andrew L
P.O. Box 84
Cardinal, VA 23025
4) Jake S
4561 w mcnab rd #17
Pompano beach, Fl 33069
5) Jack P (A1)
13 Roosevelt Place
Brooklyn, NY 11233

STEP 2:

Now take the 1st name off the list that you see above, move the other names up (5 becomes 4, 4 becomes 3, etc...) and add YOUR name as number five on the list.

STEP 3:

Change anything you need to, but try to keep this article as close to original as possible. Now, post your amended article to at least 200 newsgroups. (I think there are close to 32,000+) All you need are 200, but remember, the more you post, the more money you make! This is perfectly legal! If you have any doubts, refer to Title 18 Sec. 1302 & 1341 of the Postal lottery laws. Keep a copy of these steps for yourself and, whenever you need money, you can use it again, and again.

PLEASE REMEMBER that this fantastic program remains highly successful because of the honesty and integrity of the participants and by carefully adhering to all the directions. Look at it this way. If you are of integrity, the program will continue, and the money that so many others have received will come your way.

NOTE: You may want to retain every name and address sent to you, either on a computer or hard copy and keep the notes people send you. This VERIFIES that you are truly providing a service. (Also, it might be a good idea to wrap the $1 bill in dark paper to reduce the risk of mail theft). So, as each post is downloaded and the directions carefully followed, five members will be reimbursed for their participation as a List Developer with one dollar each. Your name will move up the list geometrically so that when your name reaches the ..1 position you will be receiving thousands of dollars in CASH!!! What an opportunity for only $5.00 ($1.00 for each of the first five people listed above). This AAA system is very legit, and is perfect for creating financial security. This program is also worth 100x the amount you will spend to start it.

Special Bonus Offer

Thanks to PayPal and the Internet, this investment is now virtually ZERO! And what's more, the entire process is FASTER, EASIER, and MORE LUCRATIVE than it has EVER been!

I WAS SHOCKED WHEN I SAW HOW MUCH MONEY CAME FLOODING INTO MY PAYPAL ACCOUNT

That's right my PayPal account. It is now possible to achieve the same or even greater returns by listing emails that have their own PayPal accounts. The only things you will need are: An email address. A Business PayPal account with at least $6 deposited in it, and just 15 to 30 minutes of your time. This program takes just half an hour to set up. After that, there is absolutely no work whatsoever to do on your part. You have absolutely NOTHING to lose, and there is NO LIMIT to the amount of income you can generate from this one single business program.
Just follow the instructions exactly as set out below and then prepare yourself for a HUGE influx of cash over the next 30 days! Here's what you need to do to get started NOW. . .

REQUIREMENTS

1. An email address
2. A Premier or Business PayPal account

STEP 1:

Setting up your FREE PayPal Account It's extremely safe and very easy to set up a FREE PayPal account! Copy and paste this to the address bar https://www.paypal.com (notice the secure "https" within the link). Be sure to sign up for a free PREMIER or BUSINESS account (and not just a PERSONAL account) otherwise you won't be able to receive credit card payments from other people.

STEP 2:

Sending PayPal money "It is an undeniable law of the universe that we must first give in order to receive." Now all you have to do is send $1.00 by way of PayPal to each of the six email addresses listed below. Make sure the subject of the payment says...

PLEASE PUT ME ON YOUR EMAIL LIST
(this keeps the program 100% legal...so please don't forget!)

Note: (If you do not see the full email address for the 6 members, just hit reply to this email and they will show up.)

(Just in case you still haven't opened your PayPal account yet, use this link to open one in your name), https://www.paypal.com

1.) wilsoncrenshaw@msn.com
2.) prem_ks@hotmail.com
3.) corey_grayson@hotmail.com
4.) sueandbrian@execulink.com
5.) postachio@hotmail.com
6.) brooklynspy007@yahoo.com

STEP 3:
Adding Your Email Address
After you send your six $1.00 payments, it's your turn to add your email address to the list! Take the #1) email off the list that you see above, move the other addresses up one (6 becomes 5 & 5 becomes 4, etc) then put YOUR email address (the one used in your Pay Pal account) as #6) on the list.

MAKE SURE THE EMAIL YOU SUPPLY IS EXACTLY AS IT APPEARS IN YOUR PAYPAL ACCOUNT.

STEP 4:

The Pure Joy of Receiving PayPal Money!
You are now ready to post your copy of this message, to at least 200 newsgroups, message boards, etc.

All you need is 200, but remember, the more you post, the more money you make - as well as everyone else on the list! In this situation your job is to let as many people see this letter as possible. So they will make you and me rich!!!! You can even start posting the moment your email is confirmed. Payments will still appear in your PayPal account even while your bank account is being confirmed.

Remember stick to the game plan, be honest and don't get carried away and you'll make some cash! Good luck out there.

DIRECTIONS FOR HOW TO POST TO NEWSGROUPS

Step 1:

You do not need to re-type this entire letter to do your own posting. Simply put your cursor at the beginning of this letter and drag your Cursors to the bottom of this document, and select 'copy' from the edit menu. This will copy the entire letter into the computer's memory.

Step 2:

Open a blank 'notepad' file and place your cursor at the top of the blank page. From the 'edit' menu select 'paste'. This will paste a copy of the letter into notepad so that you can add your name to the list.

Step 3:

Save your new notepad file as a .txt file. If you want to do your postings in different settings, you'll always have this file to go back to.

Step 4:

Use Netscape or Internet explorer and try searching for various newsgroups (on-line forums, message boards, chat sites, discussions, etc.)
Step 5:

Visit these message boards and post this article as a new message by highlighting the text of this letter and selecting paste from the edit menu. Fill in the Subject, this will be the header that everyone sees as they scroll through the list of postings in a particular group, click the post message button.
You're done with your first one!

Congratulations...THAT'S IT!

All you have to do is jump to different newsgroups and post away, after you get the hang of it, it will take about 30 seconds for each newsgroup!

REMEMBER, THE MORE NEWSGROUPS YOU POST IN, THE MORE MONEY YOU WILL MAKE!! BUT YOU HAVE TO POST A MINIMUM OF 200

That's it! You will begin receiving money from around the world within days! You may eventually want to rent a P.O.Box due to the large amount of mail you will receive. If you wish to stay anonymous, you can invent a name to use, as long as the postman will deliver it.

JUST MAKE SURE ALL THE ADDRESSES ARE CORRECT.

Now the WHY part:

Out of 200 postings, say I receive only 5 replies (a very low example).

So then I made $5.00 with my name at ..5 on the letter. Now, each of the 5 persons who just sent me $1.00 make the MINIMUM 200 postings, each with my name at ..5 and only 5 persons respond to each of the original 5, that is another $25.00 for me, now those 25 each make 200 MINIMUM posts with my name at ..4 and only 5 replies each, I will bring in an additional $125.00! Now, those 125 persons turn around and post the MINIMUM 200 with my name at ..3 and only receive 5 replies each, I will make an additional $626.00! OK, now here is the fun part, each of those 625 persons post a MINIMUM 200 letters with my name at ..2 and they each only receive 5 replies, that just made me 3,125.00! Those 3,125 persons will all deliver this message to 200 newsgroups with my name at ..1 and if still ONLY 5 persons per 200 newsgroups react I will receive $15,625,00! With an original investment of only $5.00! AMAZING! When your name is no longer on the list, you just take the latest posting in the newsgroups, and send out another $5.00 to names on the list, putting your name at number 5 again. And start posting again.

Kevin: There is no program to show " -----------" in the screen. The radio will change country designation when you hit upon a particular frequency. EG enter 5975, 9410 and you will see the change to England. Those have been standard BBC freqs for a long time.
Then , of course , you will be stuck with England in the screen.

Gegroet,

OK. You're message was on the low end of the "queue" for too long. I'll take some time to reply now.

Well, I was more thinking in term of ASICs then "generic" DSP-processors.

When I left school (in 1993), I saw the first ASIC-chips (a V21/V23 decoder) which where based on DSP-technology; so I guess these things must be pretty commonplace now.
If that is the case, a AM-decoder which is also able to do "detect" a AM-signal is infact SBBc and decode it correct (and not as a "normal" DSB-AM signal).

Concerning the DRM-chips, if you look at the specification from TI (see link below, they say that this one chipset can do DAB, DRM, FM, RDS and AM (plus mp2, mp3 and wma-playback).

So this does look like a SDR but I don't know if it is actually possible to "flash" the device and upload new DSP-code into it.

OK, I understand.

But I've been thinking about this.
It can image that a AM-decoder can decode this correctly for CHU, but I don't know if this would apply for a broadcasting-signal.

I cannot receive the CHU-signal here (there's a RTTY-like signal ontop of 3330 Khz and a broadcasting-station on top of 7335 khz) but are there other signals just below the CHU-signal. (CHU is USB, correct).

I wonder what would happen if you would have a situation like this:
- Say that you have a radio-station in 5 Khz USB SSBc at (say) 7200 Khz
(hence, taking up 7310 to 7315 Khz; just a random frequency)
- and you have a second signal just below (either a SSBc from 7305 to 7310, or a DSB-AM from 7300 to 7310).

How would a AM-decoder react if it was tuned to 7310Khz. Wouldn't he think this is a DSB-AM station from 7305 to 7315 Khz and completely decode this incorrectly?

A DSP/ASIC based signal might be programmed to see that the signal at 7305-7310 Khz is completely different then 7310-7315 KHz and switch to SSBc because of that, but how would an "analog" AM-decoder react to this?

True, but I have the impression that the DRM-people where looking for a digital system to start with.

Broadcast is one of the last areas which are now still analog and there is a general tendency to migrate to digital.

> ... Frequency diversity and SFN is done with AM.
Frequency-diversity from broadcasting has the advantage that the meta-information (i.e. the information on what frequency the alternative signals can be found) is included in the stream itself.

The user does not have to do anything and I think this is a major issue for the aspect for the user-interface.

Another aspect of frequency-diversity is that in a digital signal, there is no direct relation anymore between the signal-level at RF-level and what the listener hears. As long as the signal is good enough to be decoded, the listener will sound the same thing.

For AM where this is a direct link between the signal-level and the volume of the signal you hear (or the background noice-level in case you use AGC), this means that switching between two different frequencies with different signal-levels will produce a difference in audio-level for the user.
There is nothing more annoying when you listen to your FM-radio in the car and that the signal-level (or any other acoustic element) suddenly changes when the radio switches to an alternative frequency. (it doesn't happen a lot and when a FM-network is well designed, you will not hear it), but sometimes it does happen.

Digital broadcasts do not have this problem.

True, but one of the advantages of a digital system is that the amount of error-correction can be changed. Groundwave broadcasts has different characteristics than single-hop broadcasts in a "local" band as does a multiple hop transmission to the other side of the world.

The better signal you have, the less error-correction is needed and the more capacity of the transport-stream can be used for actual audio instead of error-correction bits.

Over here, these things are now what people have come to expect. They find it "normal" that they can drive from one side of the country to the other side with their (FM) car-radio tuned to one station and not having to do anything. Radio show the stations name for a couple of years now and as of one or two years, it is also "normal" that the name of the artist and the song that is playing shows up on their radio-screen.

But, in essence, you are correct. A easy interface is one thing but it is not the "killer application". It is "content" that drives the market.
If you provide new stations with content that people want to listen to, than people will switch to new technology. (or just say "OK, I'll take a that new kind of radio", when they old radio needs replacing, or when they buy a new car).

So, if DRM allows for new additional stations (like the stations from RTL), then people will switch.

A lot of the large SW-broadcasters do broadcast on multiple frequencies, don't they?

> ... The time delay for lockup to DRM or DAB is

I do agree between DRM, DAB and FM, but I would concider this only be important when you completely lose the signal from one platform. (e.g. you're driving under a bridge where you do not have a DRM-signal but where DAB or FM might be OK).

AF between DAB and FM does work OK. When you drive out the coverage-area of a DAB-transmission, the radio in my car (a FM/DAB radio) will switch to the same station on FM. (unless you where listening to a DAB-only station of course).

This switch-over can also happen tempory. E.g. your tuned to a "national" station on DAB, it is possible that the "TA" (traffic announcement) information inside the DAB-stream will make your radio switch to a local FM-frequency for the traffic-information and then switch back to the national DAB-station afterwards.

>>- it's one technology for LW/MW, for SW, for 11 meter "local" broadcasting >>and, with the extension of DRM+, for band I and band II.
> So could SSBc and maybe NBFM

Well, the goal would be to digitise the radiostation now on FM.
Switching to another analog mode would (IMHO) not be concidered an option.

>>- And it allows you to lower the transmission-power (and hence the >>electrivity-bill).

> My observations of DRM on shortwave has been that high transmitter power is True, but I don't know if SSBc is a real option (see above).

Concerning transmission-power, one of the examples is the BBC worldservice for Europe on MW here. They broadcast in AM on 648 Khz with The DRM-broadcast at 1296 Khz is 70 KW (and also 500 KW when broadcasting in AM at that frequency).

Well, it's not really imune, but it is less influenced by it. Selective fading influences parts of the spectrum and you should remember that a DRM-signal concist of a large number small carriers one next to another. Selective fading influences only a number of carriers, but not all of them at the same time.

As the bits of the transport-stream are first "scrambled" before being spread out over the different carriers (and "descrambled" at the receiver-side), this means that the errors due to the selective fading-will also be "spread out", and that's where the error-correction techniques come in.

So, yes, selective fading does have an effect, but there due to the way digital broadcasting works, these effects will be partly countered.

I'm sorry but I have to stop now. (yes, I have a life outside the internet too. :-)). I'll reply to the last part later.

Just a small reply.

> How does DRM react to overlapping spectrum from an adjacent or co-DRM? Not > likely very well given its poor performance in the presence of DSBAM or SSB > overlapping its spectrum.

True!

And that's one of the issues I see with DRM. If it would become successfull, it would increase competition for frequencies in the SW-band which hasn't existed for the last couple of years. (as every was then leaving the SW-bands).

BTW. Something I found yesterday. The website of the British version of "radio Luxembourg".
http://www.radioluxembourg.co.uk/about-history.htm

See the bottom part:
"2005…. The legend is back ! RTL Group is using the DRM technology to re-launch Radio Luxembourg on 7145 kHz. New generation digital radio receivers featuring DRM/DAB/FM/AM will be available by the end of the year from various manufacturers, for a perfect tune in to Radio Luxembourg. RTL Group is actively supporting the digitalradioDR initiative. www.digitalradiodr.com and www.rtlgroup.com/drm"

So, besides the MW and LW-frequencies I posted here before for Germany, France, Belgium and the Netherlands, this is another frequency: 7145 Khz for their broadcasts aimed at the UK!

Argentina does not get hurricanes or tropical cyclones - the South Atlantic ocean cannot support them - but they do get thunderstorms that can intensify to tornadic conditions.

A great train movie - filmed partly in Cottage Grove, Oregon, the site of filming of my own personal favorite movie, Buster Keaton's magnificent ode to Civil War railroading and youthful heroics, "The General." I wouldn't mind living there - a nice little community.

BTW, I love steam trains. Of all Man's creation's, these iron dragons have the greatest souls.

http://www.religioustolerance.org/biblcode.htm

Concerning the nature of Hebrew writing:

Ancient Hebrew writing usually consists of consonants only; vowels are rarely used. The language consists only of nouns, verbs and small, one letter participles. The verbs were originally derived from nouns. Thus, almost every word in Hebrew can be interpreted as either a noun or a verb, depending on the surrounding context or as indicated by any prefixes, suffixes or modifiers used. This means that innumerable passages can be read in different ways. While the ancient Hebrew written language is very efficient, it leads to massive amounts of misunderstanding.

For example, Leviticus 18:22 appears in the New International Version (NIV) of the Bible as:

"Do not lie with a man as one lies with a woman; that is detestable"

But another translator renders the same version as literally reading:

"And with a male thou shalt not lie down in beds of a woman; it is an abomination."

In modern day English this could be translated as:

"Men may not engage in homosexual sex while on a woman's bed; it is an abomination"

The former translation would appear to forbid all gay sexual activity. The second translation seems to regulate only where it is done.

One additional factor of interest to Bible coding is that, the original word roots consisted of three consonants. According to one commentator: "...to make a sentence may require only SIX letters, for example: 'He ate bread' would be 'A-K-L L-H-M'. Which, by the way, can be read as 'food-bread' because the word for 'food' and 'to eat' are the same root."

Since many words are only three letters long it makes it relatively easy to find hidden words using a skip code. There would be far more word matches in an ancient Hebrew text than in an English text with the same number of pages. Also, since words were usually written without vowels, and nouns and verbs were often identical, Drosnin's interpretation of any nearby letter combinations could take many forms.

The Carbon in the water he drank removed the poison in his stomach guts.

LOL, not anymore! I'm sure he destroyed them as soon as they were handed over, after his check cleared the bank. Damn, I bet they were great.
They must have been, to make him pay up so amazingly fast.

Carter - In your choice of the Word 'lie' :
There in lies your problem, view-point, agenda and/or opinion.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'wrong'.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'erroneous'.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'inaccurate'.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'in error'.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'misstated'.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'incorrect'.
The Intelligence Information may have been 'mistaken'.
But the word 'lie' implies {evil} intent to :
1. A false statement deliberately presented as being true; a falsehood.
2. Something meant to deceive or give a wrong impression.
My View-Point [Opinion] Is :
Neither President George "W" Bush; nor the US Senate or the US House of Representatives intended to 'lie' to the American People. They simply used the best information available to make a decision and acted. Right or Wrong once the USA took-over Iraq (broke-it) : It became the USA's National Duty to Fix Iraq [.]
Also from My Point-of-View : Those who are using the word 'lie' and applying it solely to President George "W" Bush are dealing in political propaganda associated with the {Liberal} Democrat Party of the USA and motivated by a political agenda aligned with the {Left-Wing} Anti-War-Movement; both of which are Anti-Bush.

In AM I almost always use the 6.0 kHz setting. 9.0 kHz sounds great but on the crowded SW bands its usually not an option.
For SSB SWL DXing and amateur use I have the 3 positions set at 3.0, 2.4, and 2.0 kHz.

One external piece of equipment that is great to have with this rig is an antenna tuner. The combination of matching the antenna to the frequency you are listening to and adjustment of the DSP NR to remove background noise really makes listening more enjoyable and also helps to pull out the weak DX stations.

I can't wait to get a Pro III. They have to put them on sale eventually.

You have manually entered a frequency that is programmed on the memory page for England. If you manually enter a frequency programmed on a different memory page, the display will change to match the memory page name.

The text string is the label for the current memory page and is to give you an idea what the individual memory entries for that page are.

Key in a frequency that is programmed for England and the memory system switches to that page. Until you change pages by selecting a different page from the keyboard, or by keying in a frequency that is stored on a different page, the label will remain.

You can select different pages by pressing page and then using the tuning knob or buttons.

On my radio, page 29 has no name and nothing stored in it, so if I select that page the label is cleared.

It reappears if a punch in a frequency that is stored on another page.

And some fun stuff:

The differnce is that when Clinton got heckled he let the hecklers have

How many of those 19 reasons was hammered home over and over by Powell in front of the UN? None, it was basically one issue. You really need to watch that speech. Without seeing it you don't really get how important the WMD nature of this war was being pushed. I doubt the common joe can tell you more than three reasons why we invaded. So keep blabbering about 19, but it doesn't fly.

So you don't care about any other non-Democratic countries either.
Democracy is a second tier result of invasion, but not enough for you to invade. I get it. You're acting quite the hypocrite.

> Democracy would be a gift to both those countries!

But not enough of a reason to cause an invasion. I get it.

You make my point. Strip out the immediate threat nature of Iraq, a country that didn't have nuclear weapons, or an air force or even missiles like Iran and N. Korea do, and you basically have a country that shouldn't be bothered with according to your criteria.

There was an obtuse "nexxus" (Powells term) about Saddam and the Al Queda, but no strong link seemed to be there and it has been noted that Saddam cared little about Al-Queda.

Other than that, WMD was the only intel being pushed hard. Powell now regrets that. Funny how you don't.

"Seven years ago, those activities led Virginia investigators to say there was evidence to prove Robertson "willfully induced contributions from the public through the use of misleading statements." Robertson denied the allegations. He then personally reimbursed Operation Blessing. No action was taken. "

"Based on their track record, I would say that, as an individual, I would not give to Operational Blessing," admitted the Rev. Charles Henderson, a Presbyterian minister, who is the executive director of the Association for Religion and Intellectual Life. "

"According to its most recent filing with the Internal Revenue Service, Operation Blessing gave more than half of its yearly allocation of cash donations - $885,000 - to the Christian Broadcasting Network, or CBN, of which Robertson is also the chairman.

"There is no accountability when you have two boards working hand in hand like this," said Henderson. "One never knows when you're contributing to Operation Blessing whether the money is really going to the hurricane victims, or whether it's going to pay for some more television time for Pat Robertson's television show."

"But the other part of it is also that Second Blessing has had a less than stellar record. Back in the mid-1990s during the Rwandan genocide, Robertson appealed for assistance for Operation Second Blessing on his 700 Club for money to fly relief supplies to the Rwandan refugees in Zaire. What he -- it turns out that an investigation later by the Virginia Attorney General's office revealed that the planes that were bought by the charity were actually ferrying mining equipment for a diamond mining operation, the African Development Corporation, and low-and-behold, who is the principal shareholder of this private corporation? None other than Pat Robertson himself. So, he eventually had to reimburse his own charity $400,000 for the fact that these planes were being used, not for charitable work, but for his own enrichment. Although that might itself -- ended up collapsing."

"So Robertson's use of this charity has had problems in the past, and the fact that the federal government listed it among the top three charities before the Catholic charities, before the United Jewish Appeal, before AmeriCares, before all kinds of other charities that have been in existence for decades and decades is quite unusual. "

"Well, with respect to the case that Juan was talking about, which was in 1994 when Robertson bilked Operation Blessing donors out of money to ferry mining equipment into Zaire, which was a direct partnership with Mobutu Sese Seko, he was actually -- this scheme was actually exposed by a reporter from a small paper in Virginia, and Virginia's Office of Consumer Affairs initiated an investigation and determined that Robertson "willfully induced contributions from the public through the use of misleading statements and other implications." That's a direct quote."

"So, they determined that he bilked his donors, and the Attorney General at the time, a guy named Mark Earley, agreed, but he overruled the Office of Consumer Affair's recommendation for Robertson's criminal prosecution. This might have put Robertson in jail and ended the whole -- ended his entire ministry. So, who is Mark Earley? Mark Earley, during his campaign for Attorney General, was essentially bought off by Pat Robertson. Pat Robertson donated $35,000 to his campaign. That was his largest contribution. Now, today Mark Earley is the head of Prison Fellowship Ministries. He was appointed by former Richard Nixon dirty trickster, Chuck Colson, and Prison Fellowship Ministries is very similar to Operation Blessing. They're a faith-based social work group that has accepted White House Office of Faith-Based Initiative money to do social work, and they're actually supposedly doing some relief work in Louisiana.

Seems like a good starting point - they obviously were seeking a pre-/de-emphasis curve that would be a workable compromise between the ideal for best S/N that could be achieved with new radios and listenability on typical radios. Of course, with a new standard implemented in new radios, one could use double-ended multi-band companding for greater benefit.

My father gave me a Heathkit SB 610. I am not sure what it is for. I have no instructions and my father doesn't talk much.

Is it for monitoring incoming signals?

It has lots of buttons. I notice I could control this light green line.

It has two openings for the Pl 259 coax. It it for radio and antenna?

It's a cool looking thing. But still, help!

Hi John,

Thanks for the quick and very informative response. I am going to try your settings to see if I get improvement over my settings. I had my Pro set as follows:
Filter 1 2.2 with -125 offset
Filter 2 2.5 with 0 offset
Filter 3 3.5 with +125 offset

I think that perhaps the 3.5 may be to wide and I am curious to see if the 2.9 will be more effective for my DXing.

On AM the filter i seem to utilize the most for general listening is Filter 3/3.0 Of course, for very weak DX the SSB filters on AM are usually the most effective.

Also, I noted you have the BCB mod on your rig. Do you know anyone in the states that does this mod. I am not very technically inclined.
Anything else you find helpful on the Pro for BCB dxing?
It is currently 0200 Z .. and Iran is coming in weakly on 9.495. This should prove useful for trying your filtering recommendations.
Thanks again,

It's called a synchronous AM detector. While not commonplace, it is included in several 'better' receivers. AM Stereo receivers used sync AM detectors.
The Sony IC-2010 has a highly reputed sync AM IC - analog. The WinRadio line looks to include both sync AM and conventional envelope detectors in the software DSP that runs on the PC to demodulate the 12 kHz IF output fed into the PC sound system. Any sync AM detector is capable of demodulating both DSB-AM with carrier and SSBc AM. As it is a product detector with a synchronised BFO, the same detector may also be used for SSB suppressed carrier and other modes, especially by defeating the synchroniser.

The Radioscape module based on this chipset can be programmed via USB. It looks to incorporate AM envelope detection as standard.

Why not? CHU contains human voice announcements in USBc so why would a SSBc broadcast signal be any different as far as an envelope detector is concerned?

If the IF shifts the 7310 to the centre of its 5 kHz passband, then both an envelope detector or a sync AM detector centred in the passband are going to see the upper 2.5k of the upper sideband of the lower adjacent freq. As you tune the receiver higher in frequency, less of the undesired sideband and more of the desired will be seen, thus improving the S/I. A correctly designed selectable sideband synch AM receiver would correctly align the passband on the selected sideband and with the synchronous BFO.

> 7305-7310 Khz is completely different then 7310-7315 KHz and switch to > SSBc because of that, but how would an "analog" AM-decoder react to this?

Because sync AM has a lock-in time or latency, it might be desirable to use envelope detection for rapid and coarse tuning with an optional automatic switch to sync AM mode. Of course, a DXer would want to exercise manual control. I have no idea whether such auto switching is realisable in any practical way.

It's a panadaptor, ie a specialized and limited form of a spectrum analyzer.
It's a full receiver, which is continuously tuned by a ramp generator feeding a varactor that tunes the local oscillator. The output of the detector in this "receiver" then feeds the built in oscilliscope. So on the horizontal axis you see frequency, and the vertical axis shows amplitude. In effect you get a picture of the signals being seen by the unit.

It tunes a fixed range, I think of 500KHz. It's hooked up to the output of the first mixer of your receiver. At that point, the receiver's selectivity is broad, so it won't affect operation of the panadaptor.
As you tune the receiver, it shifts the center of what the panadaptor is viewing (and showing). So if you tune the receiver to 10MHz, the panadaptor will be showing what's on either side of that frequency, out to 250KHz above and below, and as you tune up in frequency the center frequency of the panadaptor will go up, but you will continue to see what's above and below that center frequency.

The SB610 was a kit, and it came with information and parts to allow for use with different IF frequencies in the receiver. So you'd have to know that before you built the panadaptor, and now you'll have to figure out what it was built for, and if it doesn't match your receiver IF, track down the needed parts.

I never heard of a panadapter before untill you mentioned it in this thread.I just now did a www.devilfinder.com search for,Panadapter Radio Kits.There is some information there.About ten months ago at the Goodwill store I bought a Young World Base Station Transceiver radio for two dollars.A label on the back of the radio says,F.C.C.Identification Data.Young World.Midland International Corp.Goodwin Division.1900 Johnson Drive at State Line Road.Shawnee Mission,Kansas 66205 Model NO 91-070 This Device Complies With F.C.C.Rules Part -15 AS Of Date OF Manufacture OCT 1976 Taiwan.There is jack on the back of the radio for DC 9 Volts.On the front of the radio is a large dial and knob and a small on/off/volume control knob.The dial shows that the radio tunes from 26.965 to 27.255 frequency and there is a telescoping antenna on top of the radio.At the bottom of the speaker grill on the front of the radio is a large red rectangular shaped lever that says,PUSH TO TALK.I removed the back panel of the radio (which is very easy to do,there are two finger holes,just ease the rear panel off and it's off) and there is a plastic battery holder that looks like it takes six C cell batteries.I think it is a Transceiver radio intended for children to use.I don't know if the radio works or not because I haven't gotten around yet to putting some batteries in the radio.Any comments about the radio?

Yeah Tom I post the links. Both links are the same radio. This is the one DRM SW radio I have been able to find. This is the ONE concept radio by two of the companies involved in the DRM consortium.

The DRM standard in part uses proprietary code licensed by several companies depend on the mode you operate in. That does not meet the open requirement.

I don't know what you are talking about here. This software is being sold and is not free. If there is a free DRM radio decoder I did not know about it. I don't understand how this could be because some of the encoding/decoding algorithms are not free. Please point to the free DRM decoding software.

You are missing about every point in the thread. The DRM Troll started out saying that the DRM SW was imminent because consumer radios existed. There is one that I can find no thanks to the Troll. I don't know if this one radio is actually being sold since it is described as a "concept radio." He kept posting links of the same radios that are not SW radios but are AMBCB or FM. The radios that did receive SW need a computer to operate or they were very expensive professional rack mount units. Basically the radios that need a computer are science experiments for early adopters. There is no analog equivalent DRM SW radio being manufactured today as far as I can tell.

Of course there could be a DRM SW equivalent tomorrow. Of course any company with the resources could spend the money to produce ASIC's to do the job. It is just that they haven't done it yet contrary to what the DRM Troll is espousing.

A DRM radio needs to perform many functions compared to what an MP3 player needs to do. Additional functions over what an analog radio requires so even if a well financed company decided to build a high order of integration with several ASIC's a DRM radio would still draw much more power than a analog radio. Standard batteries many not be able to handle the power requirements and when DRM SW portables show up they will probably use lithium ion rechargeable batteries.

There is nothing magical about DRM technology. Everything used by the DRM scheme is used someplace else. Nothing new here and that might be part of the problem of a technology not well matched to the SW propagation environment.

Oh yeah, I have to finish the transition from work where the low speed signals are in the hundreds of MHz before I post about SW.

Some of those surge protector strips also have filtering, which may be helping.

When I heard her the first time, I thought, "How old is this woman? She sounds like my friend's 100 year old Grandmother!" Nobody mentioned her voice issues until about a week later. I like her show except when she has a painter or sculptor on it, then I can't take it.

BTW, I can do a nearly flawless imitation of her. I called a friend from a pay phone and pretended to be a confused old lady that suddenly knew a whole lot about him and his marriage problems after being totally clueless about anything for the first couple of minutes. He got so angry about the questions I asked him that I finally cracked up laughing. Now he asks me to do the "old lady" all the time.

A "Concept" unit is usually something that was built to take to trade shows to see if there is a market for a product. With radios its not uncommon for the "Concept" device to only have a computer board and software to let you operate the controls. I saw one that cost a company over $1,000,000 US dollars. It had a laptop inside, and a bunch of 50 Ohm 2 Watt carbon resistors across all of the BNC connectors, in case someone actually tried to hook it up. The real prototype DSP based telemetry receiver was still on the designers bench, not working.

I think the difference in our opinion revolve around the definition of an open standard. There is enough information on the net that someone

You haven't looked at http://sourceforge.net/projects/drm/

You download for free, compile and use. If you don't like something about the code, change it, recompile and use.

You are missing my point about the advances in technology. What has happened with MP3 players, PDAs, cell phones, and computers has lead to portable devices that are battery operated. The same concepts applied to DRM can yield similar results.

Yes, it will use more power than an analog radio. However, we are not talking about the same performance as a radio with no digital circuitry.

Every now and then the S-meter on my R8B will 'take a nap'. The needle will come to rest in the far left position and will be unresponsive to signals.

It's easy enough to fix this. All I have to do is rotate the gain control clockwise and the needle will spring to life again and work just fine. Still, I'm curious about why it happens.

I'd say it happens about once a month.

Any ideas?

In England, after the Suicide bombings on the London Subway killed over 50 people and injured hundreds, a similar bill was suggested...

http://www.techcentralstation.com/083005A.html

"Fortunately, someone seems to be listening.

Last Wednesday, Home Secretary Charles Clarke promulgated a list of "unacceptable behaviors" that would warrant expulsion from Britain.

These include "fomenting, justifying or glorifying terrorist violence" and "seeking to provoke others to terrorist acts."

Preaching and public speaking are explicitly listed as vehicles of such actions. This policy will hopefully help eliminate genuine religious hatred and the violence it causes"

It's one thing to get on the air & read James Joyce or Henry Miller;
Or William Burroughs..

- But quite another to suggest harming a specific group..

You and me, in the case above..

There is that Michael guy (I don't remember his last name just now) who said on his radio talk show in D.C.that Islam is an organization of terrorism.He got fired and later hired at a radio station I think in California.What we are seeing in America nowdays is the death knell of free speech radio.And it is happening during the bush administration too.fed govt is protecting those gay faggots and muslims in America,but let a radio talk show host get on radio and say something agains't them,and the radio talk show host probally will get fired.Muslims in American public schools can and do have their "praying to allah" in the schools with their behinds pointing to the East,but let American children in public schools have open prayer to GOD and,,,, oh noooooo,,, that's a big NO NO! fed govt is in bed with the terrorist and the sad thing is most Americans do not know it.

reply for David and Justin.
As it comes from the factory, the Icom 756 Pro series has the MW band, that is under 1600 Khz, attenuated.
The mod that the local South African Icom agent did for me to restore full sensitivity below 1600 Khz on the MW band was based on diagrams supplied by friends in the States.
I did not do the mod to enable the preamps below 1600 Khz, as I found the normal sensitivity more than adequate, a fact proved on my last three DXpeditions where the furthest and faintest of stations were logged (1 Kw at 8,000 miles away).
Also, I use my Kiwa MW Loop and that can give a massive boost to very faint signals.

The mods are not for the casual solderer, but best left to a professional with lab quality soldering equipment and desoldering gear, plus a lot of experience.

If you want more info on these mods, please e-mail me privately and I will pass on your query to my friend in the States.
If you are a serious MW BCB DXer, these mods are essential and work perfectly.

Most people,,, normal people,,, saw the Honeymooners as being wonderfull tv movies to let their hair down and sit back and relax and have a few laughs at the Honeymooners tv series movies.So did I.I am not saying that makes me normal or not,but I never even one single time saw anything weird or hatefull in the Honeymooners movies.To the Moon,Alice!,, and then he would haul off and hug and kiss good old Alice.

Canada has a hate crime law probably written by the New World Order crowd who are supplying the text for the US law as well as Australia and Britain, among others. While the law seems reasonable in that no group should be signaled out for hate, the devil is in the details. For example, clergymen can no longer read out Romans I: 26 and 27 as this can be construed as attacking one group.
For convenience, the offending text follows: 26 "Because of this, God gave them over to shameful lusts. Even their women exchanged natural relationships for unnatural ones. 27. In the same way the men also abandoned natural relationships with women and were inflamed with lust for one another. Men committed indecent acts with other men, and received in themselves the due penalty for their perversion." Churches that commit this hate crime by reading out this passage from the Bible are liable to lose their tax-exempt status so general compliance with the law is the norm. The passage seems clear enough to me. I expect that publishers of Bibles will be under pressure to delete the offending passage so in a few decades it will cease to be an issue.
I note that the Pope is planning a tour of Catholic seminaries to root out all homosexuals. I wonder if he will be charged with a hate crime.

And there are some vendors who have learned that by making the names of their clients public, as would open feedback, they're opening up their client list to raiding, and in worst cases, attack by those who would libel them.

There have been a couple of members here, who have scoured the eBay listings, and contacted bidders and buyers of certain vendors to share horror stories, allegations or rumors against the vendors. Considering that there are many who make their living on eBay, protecting their customers' identities makes some sense.

This, of course, measured against the activities of vendors who may have good feedback ratings (feedback is as much a political insurance racket as it is honest reportage, these days) but who misrepresent their goods for sale. Ironically, it's rarely the less scrupulous vendors who hide their feedback, or conduct their auctions privately.

There may be many reasons for keeping the details of one's affairs to one's self. Just because you don't stand naked on a street corner means you have something untoward concealed.

Currently, there is no way to keep feedback public without also exposing bidders' identities. So, to protect them, the feedback profile must be kept private as well.

eBay keeps pretty good histories, and users rarely, if ever, have the opportunity to manipulate the feedback profile or its percentages. If the profile claims 100% positive, that's eBay's claim, not the vendor's.
No stains to be covered, private, or otherwise.

Truly gruesome - but for the most part, he's never claimed to have class - just brass.

The funniest thing is the Ph.D. he vaunts like it makes him uniquely worthy of a devoted listenership. Most of the doctors I know border on neurosis or even psychosis, and he's no exception. Unrelenting bitterness will do that to a person.

I'm thinking about getting a YB 400 but also saw a listing for a TECSUN PL-230 (GRUNDIG YB-550PE) and was wondering if you had any commentary on the model and/or brand.

Thankz

I was more thining about the effects of being in a more crowded band.

My question is what happens if you tune a normal DSB-AM decoder to a SSBc signal (say in USB), where there happens to be another signal at the 5 Khz below.

Actually, there is a good test for that. 7335 khz is in the middle of a broadcasting-band.
Can you still hear CHU at that frequency (SSBc USB, carrier at 7335 Khz, signal from 7335 to 7340 Khz) with a normal DSB-AM radio if there is a station broadcasting at 7330 Khz in DSB-AM (i.e. signal from 7325 to 7335 Khz)?

If you need a receiver with sync-detection to be able to a SBBc station in these conditions, you can't really say that this is "compatible" with DSB-AM receivers. (as most people do note have a receiver with has sync-detection or SSB)

Now. The question is if this is necessairy bad. (see below).

>>I wonder what would happen if you would have a situation like this:
>>- Say that you have a radio-station in 5 Khz USB SSBc at (say) 7200 Khz
>>(hence, taking up 7310 to 7315 Khz; just a random frequency)
> (you mean the 5 kHz USBc carrier is at 7310, not 7200)

Yes indeed.
I started this sentence thinking of a frequency of 7200 Khz, but then changed to 7300 khz (7200 is to close to the 7100-7200 range which will become HAM-area in the future) and then to 7310 Khz (to make the frequencies "below the SSBc-station" in the same 100-range).

Funny to see how your own brain works, doesn't it, even when dealing with a simple question of "pick a random frequency".

>>- and you have a second signal just below (either a SSBc from 7305 to >>7310, or a DSB-AM from 7300 to 7310).
> (i.e. a USBc or a DSBC at 7305)

Yes indeed.

OK, but I went from the presumption that you ment a "normal" AM-radio.
Relative few radios have sync-AM detection, so I don't think you can really call this "backwards compatible" with DSB-AM radios.

Is there any research on what kind of receivers SW-listeners typically have? Do they have SSB? Sync-detection?

But I do think the situation in different parts of the world:
- here in Europe SW is used to beam news and information from "home" to holidays-destinations
- in the US -as there are no "domestic" SW-broadcasts- (at least, that's what I read somewhere) SW is probably more a "hobby" thing.
- in other parts of the world, SW is also used for "domestic" broadcasting.

But, as I already said, the question is to what degree this really matters. The way I see it, we're asking ourself the wrong question here.
The first question would be "who are we aiming this service for and what kind of equipement do they have now"?

I see two possibilities:
- either you direct this at a target-group which already owns a shortwave radio, and -then- backwards compatibility with DSB-AM is important.

- either you are looking at a group of people who currently do not have a SW-radio, and they will have to buy a new one anyway, so -at that moment- backwards compatibility of your service to existing DSB-AM receivers is not important!

So, what is our goal?

- more robust reception?
- better audio quality.
- a better user-interface
- additional services
- reduced broadcasting-power

I think the most usefull approach is to put the two techologies next to eachother and see how well they score for every element.

We can then try to "map" these to what we think is important for the listener, but that will also vary on the kind of listener you're aiming this at.
And this will different for somebody who is interested to learn about foreign countries and who also has access to the internet, then for somebody whos SW-radio is the only way to get news, information and music from the central island of the archipel.

There's a review of the 550 by Judah Smith, at radiointel.com

I'd recommend a portable with SSB capability... Sony 7600GR, YB400 (it's called something else now) or Degen DE1103.
If I was recommending one based on performance for amount of money spent I'd unhesitatingly tell you to get the DE1103.

Forget the YB400 (now renamed G4000) and the PL-230 (YB-550PE) and look at the Sony 7600GR or the Kaito/Degen DE1103 if your short of funds.

And the fact that someone would have to "sneak a rider onto

There isn't any difference, they are the same. The problem is that most of the Left-wing "religious" fanatics don't know anything about history. The long, well documented history of Left-wing funding by the Communist Party.

During the Cold War the Soviet Union provided the funding for the Left in the U.S.
Since their collapse funding is now coming from the Chinese Communist Party.

Notice how the Left will "hi-jack" just about any cause, no matter how hypocritical, that manages to undermine support of conservatism. It is a form of Communist propaganda.

Try any of the Lefts tricks in China and you will have written your death

The ironic thing is they'd even defend a worm like you if someone tried to prevent you from saying what you just did.

Since when is any group you disagree with to be deprived of legal counsel for any reason?

Yup. The great majority of ordinary American "beers" (if that's what you want to call the alcohol flavored barley water sold as "beer" by the big concerns) weighs in right around 5% alcohol, give-or-take.
"Three Two beer" (3.2% alcohol) was commonly known as "near beer". A wise man once observed that whoever naemd it "near beer" was a damned poor judge of distance.

A draft of Guiness Stout has a lower absolute alcohol percentage than a can of Budweiser.

Most foreign beers are 5% alcohol or higher - sometimes much higher - and a few are lower than that, like the above-mentioned Guinness. But you'll look awhile to find a name-brand American beer as low as 4% ABV.

Well I got it from Chuck KA6UUP in like new condition and I will say if any of you ever do biz with him, you wont go wrong. He's just as addicted to these old BAs like myself and has quite a collection too. I use three differant radios, R-5000, SP-600 and SX-28. If I'm at the computer I use the R-5000 and SP-600 but if I'm in my den I use the SX-28. They all get a lot of use.

Well, he sure paid her off amazingly quickly if there weren't! What was the big rush to get her the cash, and lots of it (Saw pics on some show of her car shopping for very $$$ cars soon after) as fast as he did?

Bill's a know it all anyway. My favorite show was when he went on this big tirade about SUVs, but he didn't know the difference between a hatchback car, a pickup, and an SUV. Not even close in a lot of his pontifications..

He's just another full of himself guy that says one thing, and gets caught doing what he says he wouldn't do. I have to admit, he shut the scandal down pretty quickly, but it's still there, waiting for re-ignition when he gets caught or sued again..

I gots a PC shortwave card in my 'puter, and if I rekky member, I hope to monitor you. But propagation has been so LOUSY lately.

I have to believe that just about everyone here does considerable A/B comparisons between their radios. You know - same antenna, same frequency, both radios adjusted for optimal reception on that station - to see which radio is "better". Of course, the term "better" is subjective, but you know what I mean. Have you ever found that one radio that consistently outperforms another turns out to be inferior, on one particular day?

When I got my Sat 800, I compared it to my Kenwood R-1000 many times, at different times of the day, and at many different frequencies. I concluded that the Sat 800 was a better radio. Not by much, probably because they are both generally excellent receivers, but the Sat 800 gave consistently better results and it is now my primary radio because of this direct comparison.

Last night, just for fun, I decided to do another A/B comparison, and this time the R-1000 was MUCH better. More sensitive, quieter, and better in every way. So much so that I thought there might be something wrong with the Sat 800. However, today things are back to normal and the Sat 800 edges out the Kenwood. Again, not by much, but if I had to choose just one to keep, it would be the Sat 800. Last night I would have concluded otherwise, based on only that one comparison.

What could account for this? Has anyone else experienced this?

Jeff

Go aks anyone. Go ask a conservative. Ask him the 19. He or she won't know them either. But keep painting it as a partisan thing.

My wife and her family are conservative. They don't know about 19 things for being in Iraq.

So that's why we have to cling to the story of Democracy in Iraq because we

No, because there was no immediate threat. That's why they had to make up Uranium from Niger.

Why would Saddam tip his hand? Because:

A) Make no difference because we were hell bent on invading for the other 18 reasons. LOL.
B) Would make him look weak among his citizens.

None of those 19 reasons had to do with immediate threat sparky.

see why you are so enamored with them if he didn't care about presenting it to the UN.

Democracy is a wonderful thing, but did anyone actually bother to ask them if they wanted it? You all assume Deomcracy is such a wonderful thing, but we shouldn't be in the missionary business. We fight wars becuase of

Because we have none and plan on being there forever. You keep saying about it's strategic position, and you are right. Strategic because we have no base in the Middle East since Saudi Arabia kicked us out. (Isn't that curious why they would do that.) Strategic because it has oil that we want.
Strategic because it's next to Iran.

So we have no schedule.

And all the bullshit about WMD and Democracy is just a cover story.

in your life. Before kids I didn't have much concern. Now I have a hawk-eye for their safety every second of the day. You think that it will call home every night.

If you don't have kids then you don't have a real clue.

Yes, answered before and below...

That is saying that you would tune the conventional envelope detector receiver to the upper side of the USBc carrier in order to suppress interference from the lower adjacent channel, just as you would if the desired signal was DSB and there was interference from the lower adjacent channel. The more difficult and potentially untenable situation for even the most sophisticated receiver is if the interferer is DSB on the upper adjacent channel of a USBc signal.

I think you are correct that the US FCC does not license SW broadcasters for domestic coverage but many supposedly international US broadcasters have their largest audiences within its borders. I am in Canada - we have a few SW transmitters for domestic coverage.

Nobody is being forced to buy a new method of reception, unless the regulators shut down the current methods, as is intended for TV broadcast. For radio, the US and Canadian regulators seem to be more inclined to let market forces decide. Canada was an early adopter of Eureka 147 in a new slice of spectrum for broadcast - the L-band. The number of receivers sold over the course of nearly 6 years since its launch is probably numbered in the high hundreds, certainly less than a few thousand, despite claiming coverage of over 10 million people. The number being used is probably a tiny fraction of that. They were not forced to buy and certainly not induced by the supposed attractions of Program Associated Data, AF interchange with FM, multiple services, and the claims of 'CD quality', etc. So all that investment in DAB transmission has been wasted. Anybody mounting an advertising-based service solely on DAB would have been foolish.

AND

- low transition cost, for both broadcasters and listeners
- rapid reach to a large potential audience
- economical receivers, in cost, weight and power consumption
- interference mitigation

Of course. But it's not easy. Real-world A-B comparisons are the right way to do some of these things, double-blind tests, controlled conditions, etc...

Check again if you think both links point to the same radio. #1 is the Mayah DRM-2010, #2 is the Himalaya with twin speakers and a star of David pattern set of controls and is unmistakeably different from #1. The Himalaya is based on the Analog Devices Blackfin processor, the 2010 on some unnamed module. Mayah has nothing to do with #2 but the Himalaya company is involved in both.

Anyway, what's the point if there is or was only one at some point in time - there will be more soon, if not already. Two hairs or split hairs - it's only hair! ;-)

The article says (and I quote):

* "...uncovered a suspected chemical weapons factory..."

* "...believed destined for attacks on..."

* "...found 11 precursor agents..."

* "...trying to determine who had assembled the alleged lab..."

"Suspected, believed, precursor, alleged"...what a bunch of weasel words. Sure sounds like "proof positive" to me. Not! It sounds more like grasping at straws and trying to find something, any flimsy thing, to cover the Shrub's ass. Maybe even similar to the "Intelligence" folks telling the boss what he wanted to hear and give him what he was gunning for from his first week in office (nudge nudge, wink wink).

And here's the clincher from your source:

"Boylan said the suspected lab was new, dating from some time after the U.S.-led invasion of Iraq in 2003".

So, seeing as it is "new" and "after" the invasion, you using this as "proof" of WMDs as a reason for starting the war sort of falls apart. (well, more than "sort of").

In any event, "A" single shell. A nice, even "one". After three UN inspectors and two years of looking during the occupation. Wow...what a "find".

Sorry, but your "sources" don't really cut the mustard...

And here's an issue for you:

Assume that Iraq did buy chemicals, probably from us. (See the circa 1983 picture of a smiling Rumsfeld with his arm around his pal Saddam, Before Demonization, of course). Its been said "Rummy has the receipts".

Two questions--

Why can't a sovereign nation, as Iraq was, have WMDs? Is the U.S. the only sovereign nation allowed this privilege?

And WE sold it to them? A little hypocritical on our part, no?

But, a moot point, as your sources above certainly don't prove Iraq had WMDs in any quantity or as an "immediate threat".

Oh, and be -very- sure to read the FAQ. Here's a direct link just to be sure you can find your way there okay:

http://www.dhmo.org/facts.html

Here's a couple of paragraphs to whet your interest:

"Yes, you should be concerned about DHMO! Although the U.S. Government and the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) do not classify Dihydrogen Monoxide as a toxic or carcinogenic substance (as it does with better known chemicals such as hydrochloric acid and benzene), DHMO is a constituent of many known toxic substances, diseases and disease-causing agents, environmental hazards and can even be lethal to humans in quantities as small as a thimbleful."

Sorry about that, I looked at the first one and not the second. The second one (himalaya) in the past needed a computer for processing the audio. Looks like it might be a stand alone radio now.

< Snip >

Interesting that Coding technologies will allow an individual use of un-compiled code. However, they are not giving up their rights to that code in a commercial enterprise. They expect to get paid for that software if it goes in somebody's radio.

<http://www.codingtechnologies.com/licensing/DRM.htm>

Also interesting is that compiled versions of the Dream software must be paid for on the DRM website.
<http://www.winradio.com/home/download-drm.htm>

Maybe you can explain why a commercial company would provide un-compiled versions of it's software for free while at the same time trying to sell it.

Reference to the official Icom 756 Pro III spec sheet will show you that the MW band below 1.8 Mhz is attenuated by 11 dB, a significant suppression that will prevent you hearing that really faint distant DX.

The mod to remove this suppression is to be found on:
Sheet 4 reverse side (back) of the "schematic diagram" at the top just left of the middle of the diagram.
the mod is bridge R801 to R803
disable/disconnect C802

I am told that the schematics for the Pro/Pro II may not be the same as for the Pro III

The mods for the 756 Pro have been described in great detail by Dallas Lankford and a Google search will reveal them.

I got a Hammarlund HQ-170. Not the Hammarlund HQ-170A. I am not sure what the (A) stands for or what is the differences in these models.

The radio is big and it works. I do not have any instructions for it yet. But I was able to buy a manual, which should come to me sometime soon.

The radio is very sensitive. And it has no speaker. I am using a small speaker and sometimes headphones. Sometimes it can over power the speaker and headphones

When I pick up a signal, say a voice, it does not sound as clear. The sound need to be better clarified. Although I play around with the buttons, and try to figure out how to better tune in a signal.

The radio has no volume button, so I use the NOISE LIMITER button and RF botton to adjust the volume acordingly.

There is a AF button but I am not sure what it does. When I bring it up the signal get stronger.

There is a ANTENNA button, I guess that works like a antenna turner. Which I also use the MFJ 956. I wonder if I could use them both?

I am not sure what the SLOT/FREG and the SLOT DEPTH buttons are for.

The radio has a few terminal screws in the rear. (A, A, G, 6m and SPKR) I have two alagator clips on A and A and to a PL 259 coax connector then too my MFJ 956 tuner then to my antenna switcher then to my homebrew 90 feet coil dipole or to my 8 foot fiberglass whip.

I have the G (I guess this is for gound), on a clamp and to my radiator pipe.

6m must be for the 50 MHZ! VHF

SPKR is this for 2 speakers or 1?

I plan to find a way to add a rear female coax connector to the back of the radio so I could better connect it to a PL259 coax.

I wonder if their is a way to add a frequency counter to this radio?

Their is one button missing. Their is a small piece of metal sticking out under the clock. Is their a way I could set the clock?

Behind the clock their is a rod in the inside and it reaches the back with a hole. Maybe that is the way to set the clock. Their is another hole like that on the other side on the SLOT FREQ side. But I do not see a rod behind it. It their suppose to be one?

Also I notice a few holes in the back and inside a plasic you can turn with a scew driver. Not sure what that is for.

I hope I could find extra tubes and fused should I ever need them.

And I wonder how others who have this radio feel about it?

Joe,

I really appreciate your long and detailed response. I ordered the 1530 and it should be here hopefully in about two weeks or so. With all of the good things that I've read about it I hope I'm not getting my hopes up to high. One thing I learned a long time ago though is that the antenna and antenna location make up a huge part of radio reception (and transmission). I have a small city lot and had planned to put the antenna in the attic but may end up putting it on the second floor instead for a couple of different reasons. I can't wait to try it out on my different radios. After it is put through its paces I'll report back here.

Again I appreciate your detailed and helpful response.

Oeps. I seams to have missed the "envelope detection" part.
Sorry about that.

This works for "analog-tuning" receivers but if you have a "digital tuning" receiver working in 5 Khz steps, this will not work.

My hitachi KHWS1 (a combined SW/worldspace receiver) does not lock on a station if it 5 Khz to high or to low. My guess is that it uses a PLL to lock itself to the carrier of the DSBAM signal.

I have got another very cheap receiver (with analog dial) and that one drifts to other (adjacent) stations if fading causes a particular station to drop out; so I guess you have the same system here (PLL locking itself to carrier).

I think it would be nice to have an idea of what kind of SW-receiver most people have.

If SSBc would have got simular result as DSB-AM, I think broadcasters would have started to use it years ago, so there must be a reason why they still broadcast in DSB-AM. Perhaps it is that DSB-AM gives them better "protection" from interference of other adjacent stations then SSBc (which might be important is a crowded broadcasting-band).

(Just a thought).

>>But I do think the situation in different parts of the world:

I once searched the internet for information on this. Does CBC/RC broadcast in SW (e.g. towards the regions up-north?).

Well, MW does have the advantage of a fixed bandplan with stations in 9 or 10 Khz steps, not the 5 "half-a-station" plan of SW.

Partly co-channel interference (or whatever the correct term should be) does not exist in MW. (it only exists partly in LW).

The thing with digital broadcasting (in general, both radio and TV) is that people only buy new equipement if it gives them new content at a "descent" audio/video-quality and if the content that is interesting enough.

Look at DAB. Here in Belgium, DAB only carriers the same stations of the public broadcaster that are already available nationwide on FM plus a minimal amount of "new" stations, and DAB is not a big success here neither.
Compair this with Denmark where -after the commercial broadcasters had refused to go onto the DAB-network- DR (the public broadcaster) was allowed to fill it with some 10 new niche-stations and the number of DAB-receivers sold went from some 10000 to 7000 in about one year.

I once asked the question in another forum and in Canada, the regulator also said that is was the intension that digital radio did not change the Canadian broadcasting-landscape, so it kind of offered the same content as already available on FM (and a couple of stations on AM).
And, as is the case of all other countries that use the same principle, digital radio never took off.

Satellite-radio (and the CHUM-system, if it ever gets started, that is) do have have the advantage that it provides people with a lot of new channels, and AFAIK, most people say that is will be an as-big success in Canada as in the US.

I think this is a good lesson for DRM. If you want users to switch over to DRM, you have to be sure it provides additional stations they do not have now. (like that is why the announcements of RTL on new stations is important).

But relative few people listen to shortwave now, if DRM does allow for the reception of stations on SW in a "descent" quality, I think you can also call that a "new" stations too.
The question is if it provides content that people are interested in.

Yes, we were hoping for the later time slot at the beginning but another programmer beat us to it. If this turns out to be crappy in the long term we'll try and move it later in the evening.

Yes 2100 is okay for the east coast but hit and miss for elsewhere. It should slowly improve over the next few weeks unless the sun belches

Unfortuneately for Mr Scotland as Utopia:

Jamieson vows to tackle violence
The justice minister has repeated her pledge to tackle the "booze and blade culture" after a survey pointed to a high level of violence in Scotland.
The UN survey said that people in Scotland were most likely to be the victims of assault.

Cathy Jamieson said Scotland remained a safe place and she would continue to try to reduce the crime rate.

Responding to criticism of the study, a UN researcher said the findings were likely to be repeated in a new survey.

Ms Jamieson told BBC Radio's Good Morning Scotland programme: "I don' t think we want to give a message within Scotland or even beyond Scotland that this a place where it's not safe to walk the streets and that people are routinely being attacked, because that's simply not people's experience.

"We do know from recorded crime figures that crimes of violence, apart from those with a sexual element, have dropped.

It's highly unlikely that we will find that England, Wales and Scotland are no longer on top in Europe for this particular type of crime
Jan Van Dijk
Head of analysis

"But we also know that in some parts of Scotland there is what's been described as the booze and blade culture where young men in particular are involved in violence that is completely unacceptable."

The international study was based on telephone interviews conducted between 1991 and 2000.

It suggested that 3% of people in Scotland had suffered an assault, with England and Wales second highest at 2.8%.

Fife Chief Constable Peter Wilson, the president of the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland (Acpos) criticised the report and insisted that the general perception of Scotland was "not one of a violent country".

He questioned whether useful comparisons could be drawn between various countries with differing reporting practices, including the US, Poland and Japan.

However, Jan Van Dijk, head of analysis at the UN Inter-regional Crime and Justice Research Institute, defended the study and said the findings looked set to be repeated when the results of a new study were published on 14 November.

He said: "It's highly unlikely that we will find that England, Wales and Scotland are no longer on top in Europe for this particular type of crime. "It's my experience that the levels of common crime don't change so much in the course of just a few years.

"These are fairly stable patterns and it has been obvious for many years that the level of violence, not necessarily homicides but ordinary violence, has been comparatively elevated in the United Kingdom."

I noticed that all DRM audio-samples I've come across have been re-encoded into some other format.
Doesn't the dream software allow extracting audio in the native format?

I would be interested to see what audio-player will handle the SDR-part of AAC correctly). And it would also be interesting to see what is really inside a DRM transport-stream.

I once wrote a program to extract the PAD and MOT-information from a DAB-stream. I might be interested to try to do the same thing for a DRM transport-stream.

What would also be interesting is to be able to make a comparison between the signals in AM and DRM. E.g., do a audio-capture of the same content (e.g. DW or RNW) at the same time (if possible using frequencies in the same band) and compair the actual audio. This would give an indication of how good or bad DRM really is compaired to AM.

> DRM here has always been very unpredictable, because no-one beams

Well, that's one of the things I find pretty strange. A local broadcast for Europe that is still so good at a 18000 kilometer distance.

Is it actually possible to extract the technical data from these samples; things like what FEC, mode they use; information about the guard-interval?

DRM allows different modes for different services and a "local" broadcast (single-hop) would use a different then for a long-distance multihop broadcast. (That's why I think these samples from Europe where so remarkable).

Hey Jim, yes it has a nice looking 24 hour clock on the upper left conner. This is just about the largest radio I had ever seen. Other then maybe military radios.

Do you have a manual for your radio?

Too bad it's not an all band radio. But their is a lot of space in the inside. I hope in time I could exspand it.

Is the RF button the on/off button for the whole radio?

Joe's our resident Wellbrook expert/advocate. Outside of calling Andy himself, you'd get the most info from Joe stateside. (I'm not knocking Joe at all, but rather find his info very helpful. In my case, it's that price point

I have to be perfectly honest. When I first read this,
I thought two things: a) how on earth do you make an antenna out of a Miracle Whip jar, and b) how come they haven't been sued by Kraft yet?

I own a nice little Toshiba model RP-F11 AM/FM/Shortwave radio I bought at a Goodwill store about seven years ago.(I wonder how money the radio sold for new? I paid two dollars for it at the Goodwill store) The signal meter on the radio wasen't working then (maybe that's why it showed up at the Goodwill store) and it still doesn't work at all now.I don't know if that affects the performance of the radio or not,the radio does work well though as far as I can tell.I wonder why radio signal meters aren't made/enclosed in such a way as to protect them from dust getting inside of them? Looking at the front of the radio,I don't see any dust inside of the signal meter,I guess it could be a tiny wire to the signal meter is loose or has become disconnected.

Before you mount the antenna indoors, I suggest that you at least try it outdoors, if possible. I have the 330S and find that it performs much better outdoors. This isn't everyone's experience, but it'd probably only take a few minutes to determine whether it'd be worthwhile to locate it outside.

Yes, one of the antennas I use is for cb radio. It is a fiber glass whip. I use it with the MFJ-956 matcher. Sometimes it helps bring in signals on the upper bands. Depending on conditions.

I could use an all metal antenna. The types that cab divers use. Not the magnet mount type. The long whip type.

I bought one this summer for use with my R-75 & 756Pro while camping, in situations when I don't want to run a randomwire through the trees or around the site.

The antenna works as advertised, and provides better signals off a whip antenna than I ever thought possible. During my tests, it was essentially equal to a 75-ft. randomwire I compared it to, at least on shortwave. Mediumwave reception, expectedly, was only fair for such a relatively short antenna at those frequencies.

I also tried the Miracle Whip with a Degen DE1103, and the signals were far better than with the Degen's built-in whip antenna (again, except MW).

The construction is very nice, and this is a well-built product. The portability factor and quick deployment is a primary reason for buying the Miracle Whip. When you consider the small "foot print" of the antenna, it is a good value. However, if you have room for a passive randomwire you will do just as well for a fraction of the cost.

The "A" designation has nothing to do with the clock. With the "A" model of the HQ-170 and the HQ-180 the hfo/mix1 were on all the time and whatever other improvements were made.

Typically the "C" denoted a clock, which may have been optional on earlier models.

To K1DUDE, an FCC rule is something to be avoided and worked around at all costs. He has spent considerable thought and money resource on fighting the FCC to get his way. If he had that same passion about complying with the rules, I'm sure he could work with the FCC and still accomplish what he wants.

It is to late for him now. K1DUDE is the type of person that draws negative attention to this wonderful hobby. We need more positive examples if this hobby is to survive. I just think that, at some point, the FCC will give into the cellular, BPS, and other special interest groups and scrap the whole amateur program. Then where would be?

I've used the Miracle Whip for SWLing and have had similarly good results. I've found it to be a convenient choice for use with the Drake SW-8, providing pleasing results all around.
I also tend to prefer using the Miracle Whip over various active antennas when listening on the Sony ICF-SW77.

(or something like that,frankly,I don't want it at all) Wouldn't that start messing up shortwave radio listening? I belive it would and someday will be.

Good question. Hammarlund made many different models over the years. Which one is the best? That's something I guess is left up to the individual user.

The model you have, the HQ-170 is an amateur band receiver, and it's counterpart, the HQ-180 is a general coverage shortwave receiver.

My V8 - an LS1 5.7 litre 6 speed manual is used almost exclusively for regular interstate trips with four on-boad and a trunk-load of heavy gear.

Without trying, according to the trip computer it regularly returns 8.9

litres per 100 Kms on ULP on these trips, a figure many 4 cylinder cars with 2-up can't match. The best I have seen is 8.1litres/100 kms but that was all downhill.

I would probably get even better figues if I didn't have to come off cruise control and then reset because some dawdling dimwit in a rice-burner is hogging the right (passing) - lane and won't move over until he sees the whites of your eyes.

Makin, if LPG ever becomes an acceptable alternative in huge numbers, it too will become expensive.

Or Ethanol? Look at BRAZIL. Cars are running there on Ethanol only. VW has a model out

The Government in not about to see it's share of petrol products revenue diminish, so whatever is used in viable numbers as an alternative to petroleum will suffer the same profiteering fat

As titillating as it might be to hammer and rail about government complicity in corporate profiteering, Ethanol comes with it's own set of problems. Being a lower yield fuel per gram, a greater volume of it needs to be produced to replace each gallon of petroleum based fuel use in the population. Since Ethanol is produced by processes originating with organic materials, usually corn or other high sugar/starch producing crops, the demand for farm products will skyrocket. As they have with soy diesel. And that's a good thing.

Until another scorching drought, like the two or three we've had over the last 15 years, at least one of which wiped out the corn crop, impacting not only ethanol prices (which in limited consumption STILL spiked dramatically in price) as well as food prices. With growers operating at a substantial percentage of capacity, if Ethanol were to replace petroleum just in the US, production irregularities and shortfalls would be as common as they are in petroleum, today.

The smart thing, but who in goverment, or activism, ever does the smart thing. is to produce flexible fuel engines that can run on a variety of fuels. Well, those Heathen Devil Evil Corporations are already doing it.

Without government input.

GM, Ford and Chrysler having fielded a substantial percentage of flex-fuel engines of their corporate fleets already. And having been doing so for the last 5 years in some cases.

Chrysler has in each line of engines, at least one model, usually the midrange power model, that is exclusively flex-fuel.

Damn, them evil bastards.

Flex-fuels will permit petro/ethanol blends to be run in virtually any proportion, in response to the vagaries of production, demand, or natural catastrophe no matter where the shortfall happens. Further, flex fuels takes the pressures of both ethanol AND petroleum production, they burn cleaner, and have been demonstrated to reduce maintenance and repair costs on vehicles when they're tried. Solving a host of problems, on all fronts, simultaneously.

Damn, them evil corporate monsters.

So, why do we not see flex fuel-pumps at every Exxon or Amoco station?

Good question. Because ExxonMobil and Amoco are champing at the bit to put in flex-fuel pumps.

Seems that government regulations are getting in the way. Even here in Illinois. And it's not about profits, or even taxes. Alcohol is taxed just like petrol. And with more fuel avaialable to be sold, there would be more per gallon tax raised for federal, state and local governments. But that doesn't seem to matter.

Thank God we've got activism driven governmental agencies to protect us from those evil corporate bastards.

Yea, On my R-1000, when I forgot that I'd used the (useless) attenuator switch on the front panel (now modified with a bit of white address label on the front edge of the knob). Or had the back panel coax/longwire switch in the wrong setting after an antenna comparison.

Seriously, the attenuator switch may need cleaning/contact treatment.
My level of broadcast station intermod went way down when I did that.
I used Tweek contact enhancer, but De-0xit would probably be the more proper product.

Go to yahoo.com...then do a search for "BAMA"...go to that site...then go to the "edibis" (sp?) mirror site --it is faster and allows more users---then go to "Hammarlund"...then choose "HQ-170". At least for the "C" model, this will give you the complete operators manual as an 82 page .pdf

The "AF" is the volume control. Use it. Put the RF control all the way on. Turn off the noise limiter. Make sure that the "AVC" switch is not in the "off" position (any other position of this switch will be OK to get you started). Assuming no other problems with the radio (sort of a big "assume" for a radio of this vintage that has not been restored), this should go a long way to clearing up your distortion.

>>> SPKR is this for 2 speakers or 1?

left screw is common/ground; Center screw is for 3-8 ohm speaker; right screw is for 500 ohm "line out".

One is for the S-meter "zero-set" Forgot what the other is for. Don't mess with them until you get the manual.

Good luck...it's not a bad receiver.

No manual. Don't recal about the RF switch being for the power or not.
Radio is tucked away in a closet.

Just out of curiousity, what did you pay for yours? I don't recal EXACTLY but I paid either $20 or $40 for mine at a flea mkt. It was missing the case screws so it wnted to just slide out of the cabinet. I didn't expect it to work and was very happy to see it did. Needs alignment badly but is functional. Oh yea, it has a crack in the clock crystal also...

I'm a little surprised that the Sat 800 would generally outperform the R-1000, but anyway...

On the day the R-1000 had the 'edge', had either it or the 800 changed position or orientation in any way? I'm wondering if, on this particular day, you were using the R-1000 in a location that is quieter than where it's usually situated.

Was there a change in the way either radio was powered?

I could be wrong, but I have the sneaking suspicion that something is keeping the R-1000 from performing to its full potential most of the time.

Hi dxAce: I have the Icom R75, it covers a lot of bands. The Hammarlund 170 does not have many of the bands I like to listen to, such as 41m & 49m. And it does not have the part in the rear for the PL259.

I will look around for a Hammarlund 180. If it carries 10m-160m. Also I notice that the Hammarlund 180 has an openning hatch on the top. This is cool.

I wonder if these radio were used in the military?

Hammarlund, like Hallicrafters, Stromberg-Carlson, Motorola and countless others made radios for the military. And, often, the military versions were similar to the civilian versions.

I have a Hammarlund BC-794 SuperPro. It's Signal Corps issue. A military version of SP-200.

Been using it since my grandfather dropped it on me in the early 60's. Been recapped twice, retubed often and at 100 lbs (with power supply) I've used it to keep the boat from blowing away in a tornado.

It's still one of the finest radios in my stable, and like all real radios, keeps me warm on winter nights.

Oscar Hammarlund's history, if you're into history at all, is both wide and deep, and like Bill Halligan, his roots extended deep into the fabric of Chicago.

Hammarlund's radios were never cheap. Halligan's top of the lines were 'must buy' by comparison. The last SP-600 incarnations kissed the neck of $1000. When $1000 could get you into a new VW. The Hammarlund weighed a little less than the car. But Hammarlund's radios were exceptionally well built, easily serviced (though not simple radios) and stellar performers.

Like most radios of their era, they'll work on a crooked wire and a good intention. But require a well designed and executed antenna to play at the limits of credibility.

They were also known for their excellent audio character, with many of the SuperPro line equipped to double as phonograph amplifiers during RF downtime.

Nice find, your HQ-170.

There have a messages about this subject in the DRM-L. The answer is not that difficult.

The people who have the patents on DRM acknowledged the fact that the guys who wrote DReaM and the other DRM-related tools did a great job and also helped to develop DRM worldwide (people who tried out DRM, maked websites about it, sent reception-reports to the broadcasters, ...).

In short "the internet community" did help the developement of DRM they want to acknowledge that.

For that reason, they say that -althou they do own the patents on this technology- they allow everybody who want to try it out and help the developement of it to use it for free, develop further on it, play around with it, etc. etc.

But, we don't want to have people "sell" the stuff or make money from it without them (the patent owner) to get payed for it. That's why "ready to run" packages are not allowed.
In practice, this excluses a large number of windows-users (who do not have a compiler on their machine anyway), and therefor 99 % of the "just user" audience, and -in effect- limit its use to the "developpement community".

In practice, it's a good compromise as it allows people who are really interested in it to access the technology at no cost (software is GPLed, free and open-source and not patent-limitations involved), and gives them the income for their patents for commercial use.

BTW. There's not only the issue of the source-code and the patents, you also need the basic specifications. That you can just download from the ETSI website for free: http://pda.etsi.org/pda/queryform.asp

Do a search for "201 980" (or "digital radio mondiale") and you can download it from there for free. (you will need to register just once the first time you download something).

Cheerio! Kr. Bonne.

I think you mean the Ocean Hopper. Including LW and BCB, there were a total of six coils. They show up on eBay pretty regularly, but the bidding for nice ones often goes over $100.

Sipping Coffee on the Euphrates
By Dr. Walid Phares
FrontPageMagazine.com | September 29, 2005

The following is a virtual chat, taking place between two Iraqi brothers after watching TV. The arguments are real, but the names have been changed. The dialogue is adapted from a combination of actual discussions that took place between two brothers sipping coffee late Saturday on the Euphrates river.

Hassan: So, Majid, what's going on in the world today?

Majid: Well, we are still terrified by those terror attacks by Zarqawi (may Allah take him away). As usual, he killed civilians, kids, women, and elderly.

Hassan (deep breath): That is our destiny. We have no choice but to resist the terrorists, whatever the price. For there is no higher price than the one we paid under Saddam Hussein. We will suffer all what the terrorists would do, but we will not return to what was here before April 2003. The most important thing that happened to us was the removal of the monster. I can't even think back and imagine the days of massacres, torture, and oppression. Let all the Zarqawi of the world come here. Ahlan wa sahlan ("Welcome" in Arabic), because eventually no one will want his regime of the Taliban to take root in Iraq.

Majid: But there is one thing I don't understand.

Hassan: What is it Majid?

Majid: Those people in London and America.

Hassan: What's with them, Majid?

Majid: They are organizing these marches..

Hassan: What's wrong with that? These are democracies, Majid. And in democracies you demonstrate, express yourself, say whatever you want. That's why we're struggling here. That's what we want here...That's why we're dying..

Majid: But Hassan, these demonstrations are not calling for democracy.

Hassan: What are they calling for ,then?

Majid: They say they want peace.

Hassan: Azeem ("Great"), we all want peace. Where is the problem?

Majid: They say they want to stop the war in Iraq..

Hassan: Tamam ("Perfect"). Isn't it what we all want in Iraq? Aren't we sick and tired of this war, this terrorism?

Majid: Yes, Hassan, it's true. But that is not what these people want.

Hassan: I don't understand, Majid. Don't they want peace and the end of war in Iraq?

Majid: That's what they say but...

Hassan: But what Majid?

Majid: ...they say they want the U.S. troops to pullout immediately.

Hassan: Like this? And to abandon the Iraqi people, leaving them alone against Zarqawi, Iran, and the terrorists coming from Syria and Saudi Arabia? That's what these demonstrators want?

Majid: Yes. They say it is not America's business to be in Iraq.

Hassan: But it is we Iraqis who want them to stay and help us...our government is asking them to help us. What's with those demonstrators?

Majid: They are saying our government is not legitimate. That is was formed under American occupation.

Hassan: But we elected our government. Didn't they see 8.5 million people voting, including old women?

Majid: They don't care. They say the Iraqi people are fighting U.S. and Coalition forces. They say the insurgents are the Iraqi people.

Hassan So Zarqawi's terrorists are the Iraqi people and the 9 million voters are what?

Majid: They don't talk about the Iraqi voters.

Hassan: How about the Afghani voters?

Majid: They think the Taliban are more legitimate.

Hassan: You must be joking! How about the American voters? Do they count?

Majid: Well, they want to influence them...to bring down the Blair and Bush governments and bring in governments that would pull Coalition forces from Iraq.

Hassan: How about our government here? They want our government to fall, too?

Majid: Yes, some of the activists wants that, too.

Hassan: And whom do they want to see in running Iraq?

Majid: Some of them say we had no business toppling Saddam, so I assume they 'd want him back. One of their main leaders is British MP George Galloway, who came to Iraq when we were in prison and supported Saddam.

Hassan: Do you mean those Europeans and Americans who came here on red buses and wanted to protect the Saddam regime from the U.S. and Britain?

Majid Yes, many among the red buses people are among the demonstrators in London and Washington..

Hassan: They still want to protect Saddam's regime even after he is going on trial for massacres?

Majid: They never answer that question.

Hassan: They don't want Saddam on trial?

Majid: They say it is not their problem.

Hassan: Did they wanted Hitler and Mussolini on trial?

Majid: They say that was different.

Hassan: Why?

Majid: Because Hitler and Mussolini massacred people....

Hassan: How about Milosevic?

Majid: They're OK with him on trial -- except the group called International ANSWER, which supported him, because he was a Socialist.

Hassan: But they don't want anyone to try Saddam?

Majid: They say that is up to the Iraqi people.

Hassan: But the Iraqi people decided.

Majid: They say Iraq is under occupation.

Hassan: But so were Germany, Italy, and Japan when their dictatorship were on trial.

Majid: Yes, but they say the invasion of Iraq was illegal.

Hassan: And the invasion of Germany was legal?

Majid: They say Iraq didn't attack us first Hassan: And Nazi Germany did? How about Milosevic? Did he attack the United States?

Majid: At the time, the Nazis massacred peoples. Milosevic massacred the Muslim minority in Serbia.

Hassan: And the Baathists didn't massacre the Shi'ites? Saddam didn't massacre the Kurdish Muslim minority?

Majid: Hassan, why are you asking me? They said it, not me!

Hassan: OK, so what kind of peace are these protestors calling for?

Majid: Immediate withdrawal of US forces

Hassan: But that is war, a bigger war...Zarqawi, al-Sadr, and others will wage wars elsewhere, not just here.

Majid: They say it won't be their business. Besides it was Bush and Blair's problem: Had the invasion not taken place, there wouldn't have been an insurgency.

Hassan: And what would have happen had no invasion taken place?

Majid: Nothing, peace.

Hassan: So before the removal of Saddam Hussein. there was peace?

Majid: They say there were no pictures of bloodshed on TV

Hassan: So there was no bloodshed in Iraq before the toppling of Saddam?

Majid: They say Saddam was no angel, but there are many dictators around the world? And why is it up to the U.S. to pick one dictator and remove him?

Hassan: But he had killed 400,000 Shi'ites and 200,000 Kurds, plus another 100,000 Sunnis, Chaldo-Assyrians and others. That wasn't enough to intervene?

Majid: They say the U.S. should not change regimes..

Hassan: How about Haiti? Didn't the U.S. change the Cedras regime? How about Milosevic? Wasn't he brought to justice? How about Noriega?

Majid: They say these dictators were oppressing their people..

Hassan: And Saddam wasn't?

Majid: Why are you upset with me? I was in prison for years. I've got my share. It's them you need to question.

Hassan: I really don't understand these people. They say they want war to cease, and they encourage the terrorists to win. They say they want peace, and they wish the dictator and the radicals to reign over us. They say they are Progressives and secularists, and they allow the fundamentalists to massacre us. They say they promote liberties, and they want ours to vanish. They say they demonstrate for the Iraqi people, and their actions are aimed at plunging the Iraqi people under terror and oppression. What on earth do they want with us?

Majid: Hassan, we've got to be fair. These are their soldiers, their equipment, and their money. They want them out. It is their right, no?

Hassan: Yeah, it is their right to do what they want with their soldiers and money. But it is not their right to deny us ours.

Majid: And how are they denying our rights?

Hassan: Galloway came to Iraq during the presidency of Saddam Hussein to support him. Saddam was massacring us. What was his business coming here with all these red buses to support the oppressor? Why didn't these buses visit the mass graves or the victims of chemical attacks? Why did they position themselves around Saddam palaces and not around the Kurdish and Shi'ia villages?

Majid: I don't know. Maybe they thought America is the aggressor and Saddam is the nationalist?

Hassan: Did you say America was the aggressor and Hitler the nationalist?

Majid: I didn't say that. You said it.

Hassan: How about Sudan? There were no red buses there, where there? One million black people were massacred there. Where were the demonstrators of Washington and London?

Majid: They say that was a civil war.

Hassan: Wasn't Yugoslavia a civil war?

Majid: Let's quit talking about Yugoslavia and Sudan. These demonstrations are about Iraq. Besides, there are many mothers and relatives of American soldiers killed in our country. They are saying that the troops should go home.

Hassan: Are they saying that the U.S. army should go home, because their children were killed in combat?

Majid: They are saying U.S. forces shouldn't have been in Iraq in the first place.

Hassan: So, had their sons and daughters not been killed, they would have asked for the withdrawal of U.S. forces?

Majid: They say U.S. forces must withdraw, because it was and is an illegal war, regardless.

Hassan: So, do they want to pull the troops because soldiers were killed or because the troops shouldn't have been sent in the first place?

Majid: Don't be cynical Hassan, these soldiers are their children and relatives.Would you send your children to be killed in another country?

Hassan: Our children were killed in our own country.

Majid: Yes, but they don't like to have their soldiers killed in our country

Hassan: Did they demonstrate against their government on June 7, 1944? They sent their sons to liberate Europe: 4,000 died in 12 hours in Normandy. Another 6,000 died on one island in the Pacific. They brought freedom to nations around the world. Is our freedom a lesser one? I understand that parents suffer for the loss of their children. But is there a draft in America?

Majid: No, it is a voluntary recruitment.

Hassan: Why do they go to the Army then? They know that they are risking being killed.

Majid: I don't know. But one of their activists, Cindy Sheehan, lost her son in Iraq and is leading the campaign against President Bush now.

Hassan: Was she against his decision to join the armed forces?

Majid Apparently yes. That's what she says.

Hassan: Did she try to convince him not to enroll?

Majid: Yes, that's what she said.

Hassan: So, her son refused to obey her

Majid: Yes.

Hassan: He disagreed with her?

Majid: Yes.

Hassan: So he had different views than she did?

Majid: Well, he joined the Army, and she didn't want him to join.

Hassan: Was she against the War in Iraq before he joined?

Majid: She was against the removal of Saddam.

Hassan: And now she is acting as a mother who lost her child who refused to obey her and was killed in a war she opposed?

Majid: Exactly. She considers the war that liberated us a war that killed her son. She was against regime change in Iraq. I also heard she criticized Bush, Chirac, and Blair for removing the Syrians from Lebanon.

Hassan: Why is she against our peoples' freedoms?

Majid: She says removing Saddam wasn't a good cause.

Hassan: Did she ever meet with Iraqi mothers who lost their children, husbands, and babies?

Majid: Not that I know of.

Hassan: So stopping the genocide in Iraq is not enough of a noble cause for her?

Majid: She and her movement say no.

Hassan and Majid both sip their coffee and take a deep breath.

Hassan: If Mrs. Sheehan were elected president of the United States, not George Bush or Kerry, and she would be informed that 400,000 sons and daughters were in the mass graves in Iraq, that 8,000 Kurds were gassed to death, what would she do? Would she order U.S. troops to rescue the survivors or not? Would she be willing to use the resources of the U.S. to save more children from Saddam?

Majid: If the American people would have elected her president and it was established that Saddam had murdered close to a million people, a majority of Americans would have asked any president to intervene.

Hassan: Even militarily?

Majid: Well that's what they did in Bosnia and Kosovo, and it wasn't Bush. It was Clinton. The American people intervened in Europe twice to save nations from genocide. Close to one million U.S. lives were lost for what was perceived as a noble cause: Unless Arab blood is not considered worth saving.

Hassan: So Majid, you're telling me that the lady who is protesting the American presence in Iraq today - if elected as a President - would have sent troops to remove Saddam?

Majid: If she was informed by her Administration about the genocide, and the pictures from Iraq's mass graves would have been aired by CNN, as they were in the 1990s from the Balkans, the American people would have demanded she send the troops. Whether she would have sent them, or suffered their repudiation, is hard to say.

Hassan: And if she sent troops, her son would have been part of these troops?

Majid: Yes. Ironically, he would have been a soldier in Iraq and could have been killed.

Hassan: And had he been killed, would his mother have withdrawn the troops?

Majid: Allah knows, Hassan. Only Allah knows. When President Clinton was in the White House, he sent the army to Bosnia, Haiti, and Kosovo. When he left the White House, he opposed sending forces to Iraq. He had plans to remove Saddam when he was in the White House.

Hassan: But whatever our politics, Hassan, we need to respect the feelings of people. Mothers' feelings are the fabric of society.

Majid: Yes, Hassan. All mothers. American mothers, who mourn their sons, accept their sacrifices, and consider them heroes, and those who like Sheehan, who have different views: All mothers, Hassan. Our Iraqi mothers, too. They have lost their children in mass graves. They certainly feel with those American mothers. They appreciate their sacrifices. At least their sons had the freedom to choose to live or die. Our mothers' sons had no choice. Saddam massacred them. Casey Sheehan was a hero whose sacrifice saved the lives of many Shi'ites and Kurds. In Iraq and to many Iraqi mothers, he is a hero.

Hassan: I hope his sacrifice won't be dishonored. He died to give life and freedom to others. That is a noble cause. The worse that could happen to his memory is to destroy the nobility of the cause he died for.

Majid: More coffee?

Hassan: Well, just one more cup☕.

Suicidalism
By Eric S. Raymond
esr.ibiblio.org | September 29, 2005

The most important weapons of al-Qaeda and the rest of the Islamist terror network are the suicide bomber and the suicide thinker. The suicide bomber is typically a Muslim fanatic whose mission it is to spread terror; the suicide thinker is typically a Western academic or journalist or politician whose mission it is to destroy the West's will to resist not just terrorism but any ideological challenge at all.

But al-Qaeda didn't create the ugly streak of nihilism and self-loathing that afflicts too many Western intellectuals. Nor, I believe, is it a natural development. It was brought to us by Department V of the KGB, which was charged during the Cold War with conducting memetic warfare that would destroy the will of the West's intelligentsia to resist a Communist takeover. This they did with such magnificent effect that the infection outlasted the Soviet Union itself and remains a pervasive disease of contemporary Western intellectual life.

Consider the following propositions:

There is no truth, only competing agendas.

All Western (and especially American) claims to moral superiority over Communism/Fascism/Islam are vitiated by the West's history of racism and colonialism.

There are no objective standards by which we may judge one culture to be better than another. Anyone who claims that there are such standards is an evil oppressor.

The prosperity of the West is built on ruthless exploitation of the Third World; therefore Westerners actually deserve to be impoverished and miserable. [the origin of the left's anti-white Nazism]

Crime is the fault of society, not the individual criminal.

Poor criminals are entitled to what they take.

Submitting to criminal predation is more virtuous than resisting it.

The poor are victims. Criminals are victims. And only victims are virtuous. Therefore only the poor and criminals are virtuous. (Rich people can borrow some virtue by identifying with poor people and criminals.)

For a virtuous person, violence and war are never justified. It is always better to be a victim than to fight, or even to defend oneself.

But "oppressed" people are allowed to use violence anyway; they are merely reflecting the evil of their oppressors.

When confronted with terror, the only moral course for a Westerner is to apologize for past sins, understand the terrorist's point of view, and make concessions.

These ideas travel under many labels: postmodernism, nihilism, multiculturalism, Third-World-ism, pacifism, "political correctness" to name just a few. It is time to recognize them for what they are, and call them by their right name: suicidalism.

Trace any of these back far enough (e.g. to the period between 1930 and 1950 when Department V was at its most effective) and you'll find a Stalinist at the bottom. Among the more notorious examples were:

Paul de Man - racist and Nazi propagandist turned Stalinist, and fonder of postmodernism;
Jean-Paul Sartre, who described the effects of Stalinism as "humane terror" and helped invent existentialism; and Paul Baran, who developed the thesis that capitalism depended on the immiseration of the Third World after Marx's immiseration of the proletariat failed to materialize.

Al-Qaeda didn't launch any of these memes into the noosphere, but it relies on them for political cover. They have another effect as well: when Islamists characterize the West as "decadent", and is waiting to collapse in on itself at the touch of jihad, they are describing quite correctly and accurately the effects of Western suicidalism.

Stalinist agitprop created Western suicidalism by successfully building on the Christian idea that self-sacrifice (and even self-loathing) are the primary indicators of virtue.

In this way of thinking, when we surrender our well-being to others we store up grace in Heaven that is far more important than the momentary discomfort of submitting to criminals, predatory governments, and terrorists.

The Communist atheists of Department V understood that Christian self-abnegation tends to inculcate a cult of self-sacrifice even among Westerners who are themselves agnostics or atheists. All the propagandists had to do was make the case that the value of self-abnegation applies to culture as well as individuals. By doing so, they were able to entrench the idea that suicidalists are morally superior to non-suicidalists.

They did this so successfully that at least one major form of Western self-abnegation seems to have developed as a secondary phenomenon: "deep environmentalism". I can't find any sign that this traces back to the usual Stalinist suspects, but it is rather obviously a result of generalizing suicidalism not just to culture but to species.

I think it's important to understand that, although suicidalism builds on some pre-existing pathologies of Western culture, it is not a native or natural development. It is an infection that evildoers and their dupes created and then spread as part of a war against the West; their goal was totalitarian control, and part of their method was to talk the West into slitting its own throat.

Al-Qaeda's goal is the restoration of the Caliphate and the imposition of shari'a law on the West so that the Dar al-Harb is abolished and absorbed into the Dar al-Islam. In other words, totalitarian theocracy. Western suicidalists have transferred their allegiance from Communism to Islamofascism without a hitch. They're doing their best to see that we lose - and their best is rather more effective than any bombing campaign.

Thus, to defeat al-Qaeda, stopping the suicide bombers is not sufficient. We must recognize, condemn, and reject the suicide thinkers as well.

UPDATE: Readers who think I'm peddling mere conspiracy theory here should read Double Lives: Stalin, Willi M&#65533;nzenberg and the Seduction of the Intellectuals for a description of the way KGB disinformation activity, espionage and memetic warfare fused in the 1930s.

Dear Mike,

I can empathise with you and your thought that you could make one yourself.

Unfortunately, thus far, many have tried to duplicate the Wellbrook antennas and all have failed.

Yes the antenna is costly, but when you consider what you spend on a good receiver, and noting that the antenna is more important than the receiver in terms of reception, its price looks to be more reasonable. Also remember that you may buy many receivers over the years, but you'll buy a Wellbrook only once!

Best,

Joe

Maybe this is a good place to put in that most radios inputs are not flat 50 ohms and with the antenna not matched perfectly on the far end of the connecting coax moving the near end from one radio input to another is not an equivalent situation. With reflections on the coax both radios may not see the same signal level so even if they both have the same level of sensitivity the same signal may appear much weaker on one as opposed to the other.

It's a must at the least to check several frequencies and get the averaged results to declare one more sensitive than the other.

The antenna, coax and receiver input match could change from day to day changing results. The antenna is probably is what is changing the equation, where the over all match is better with one radio over the other. Antenna characteristics can change with temperature and humidity. Ground conductivity can also come into play for single element antennas that have ground as the other half of the antenna.

Bandwidth is probably set too narrow for AM. HQ170 was designed as an SSB receiver, so default bandwidth is probably about 2.3Khz, which will make AM sound like CR*P. Also be careful what you connect to. The are 3 screws in the back, ground, 3.2 and 500 ohms. The speaker goes between ground and 3.2 ohm screw.

Has two controls. AF Gain and RF gain. AF gain is the volume control.

Yes. The front end on the 170 is designed for roughly 100 ohms, balance or unbalanced. The control is to try to match whatever you have to the 100 ohms the 170 is looking for
>

Notch filter. A hole in the passband, you get to decide where it is, how wide it is, and how deep it is.

the Two A's are for a balanced antenna, such as a folded dipole (300 ohm). SO-239 is for a 50/70 ohm unbalanced antenna like a 1/4 wave vertical or standard dipole

Radiatior pipes often make poor Radio Frequency grounds. Metalic cold water pipe near inlet, or a 'ground' field (copper radials burried in the back yard).

1 speaker 3.2 ohm usually,. There is a 500 ohm line output used for things like Phone patches and VOX.

There should already be an SO239 on the back If not, someone removed
it.

>I wonder if their is a way to add a frequency counter to this radio?
YOu can, but it is NOT simple especially. First Local oscaillator is tuned (unusual these days in a triple conversion receiver), and down converted to 3035Khz. So local oscillator +/- 3035 Khz is the tuned frequency.

Conversion from 3035 to 455 is via a crystal oscillator, 455 to 60Hz is a simple L/C circuit. Not real hard to build a very stable 395Khz L/C oscillator, especially if you are working from a regulated supply (one of the funny tubes in the HQ170 will glow white/blue when on.
That is a mercury vapor voltage regulator tube...)

I have owned three VW's before.The first one I bought was at Steakley Chevrolet used car department in 1965 in Killeen,Texas when I was in the Army.Fort Hood is right next door to Killeen.It was a 1961 VW van and had been a Chicken On Call van that someone previously owned and used it to drive around at Fort Hood,selling sandwiches and soft drinks and candy.One time when I came home on a three day holiday pass from Fort Hood,I saw an ad in the local Clarion Ledger newspaper about a 1963 VW car for sale for $1,100 and I bought that car and I drove it back to Fort Hood,I later on sold my 1961 VW van and later on traded my 1963 VW car in on a very nice 1967 Ford Car at Blackwell Chevrolet here in Jackson.In 1978,I saw a 1970 VW van for sale,it was red with a white roof and I traded my 1967 Ford car in on the 1970 VW van,I should have hung on to my 1967 Ford car.Those old VW's didn't have enough power to get out of their own way and you freeze to death in the winter time.I swore off of VW vehicles forever.

A few nights ago,I read an article about Dustoff.Dustoff is compressed air in a can and is usually used for blowing dust out of computers and different kinds of things.Dustoff is available in computer stores and department stores.The propellant in the cans of Dustoff is similar to the refrigerant in airconditioners,refrigerators,freezers,etc.The article said some kids get a high from breathing the propellant in Dustoff,the propellant also displaces the air in lungs and is very dangerous.If you have kids,be very carefull if you buy Dustoff.

He didn't care about the poor Afhani people before 9/11. You have nothing help them. So it's a bogus claim to say that I don't care about the opression of the Afghani people when your buddy Bush didn't care either.

So Bush was in it for vengence. I thought it was because he cared about those poor, opressed Afghanis. Thanks for setting the record straight that he didn't care, just wanted vengence.

It would appear that since the administrations claim was that Iraq was aiding the al-Queda, that invading Iraq was merely another act of vengence.
If it's vengence then it's not about spreading Deomcracy or freeing the opressed Iraqi's, since vengence is not about lofitier goals. Thanks for setting the record straight. I'll ignore your further bogus claims of Democracy and poor Iraqi's or Taliban people.

It says "...suspected chemical weapons factory containing 1,500 gallons of chemicals believed destined for attacks on U.S."

No where does it say what the chemicals were and how they knew they were going to be used on the US. So it's a statment that deals vaguley in facts but a lot on supposition.

The only wars that we haven't fought recently because of not direct threat were Vietnam and Korea. I hope for all of our sakes that Iraq isn't the same stupid war with same stupid results.

Voted to go based on false information. At least they have the credibility mistake.

I remember seeing two different models of small portable wireless know if Radio Shack stores still sell them though,perhaps some other stores sell similar products.

England is famous for its off the wall eccentrics.

To see how ridiculous this terrorism crap is, we had a telephone workers' strike out here a year or so ago. A few wires in phone boxes got cut. The first thing the looney tunes cops had to say was that, if the guy was caught, they were going to add a 3 or 4 year " terrorism enhancement' to the charges.

When they were hustling some 80 year old guy out of a meeting (maybe Parliament) in England in the past day or so, some guy objected, saying something to the effect of "Be careful -- he's an 80 year old man". So they pounced on him, too, and hauled his ass across a few rows of seats. Once outside, he was excluded from re-entering the building, as reported on the news, by applcation of recently passed "anti-terrorism powers" granted to the police.

So we have ordinary vandalism in the US and a simple scuffle in England both elevated to terrorist acts by power-mad, testosterone-poisoned cops. Thanks, Shrub. Thanks, Tony Lapdog. Heel,Tony, HEEL.

The view of history here is very, very short, but hardly surprising given the continuing "history is bunk" and only honoring the new.

It's a race to the bottom in oppression with laws like this.
The more restrictive the better, as long as busness or governments profit.

I'm as Califirnia-liberal as anyone on usenet, but I believe this whole hate crime business is just a proxy for thought crime.

As for "fighting words", the last successful prosecution on that basis was in 1949. So nw it's been replaced with "hate crimes" as a way of restricting speech, however benign or genuinely hateful.

If you want to go over the top, is your family proud you're a citizen of a nation which has spent its history defending slavery, whether within or without the law? How about its support of lunatics like Joe McCarthy and that disgrace to the Cathlic Church, Father Coughlin? How about its history of sending Japaanese American citizens their former possessions after release and was too fucking cowardly to consider apologizing unti recently. Hell of a lot you have to be proud

Or you proud of all that?

Well, since you insist I will tell you a few things about your homely state of Mississippi:

1. Home of an old, fat guy that likes to pretend that he's a young girl who wants sex with dogs
2. Home of an old, fat guy that likes to trespass.
3. Home of an old, fat guy who likes to go peeping into other people's trailors
4. Home of an old guy who likes scum like Strom Thurmond

Why would I want to join the military of a country that has a Commander-in-Chief who is a baboon? Or in the words of Homer Simpson "The stupidest, ugliest, smelliest ape of them all!".

Why would I want to join the military of a country that still has problems providing adequate body armour to its soldiers?

Why would I want to join the army of a country in which far too many recruits don't have any other alternative than unemployment and dead-end jobs?

Do any more peeping recently?

Beats being a Canadian anyime! Trespassing? Nope! She told me I can work on her house and camper any time.This morning I put one of my shoes heel to toe to heel to toe.It is exactly ten of my heel to toes from my bedroom window to the edge of her driveway and one more heel to toe to the left side of her camper.My house has a crawspace under it,high enough to sit up under there,that means my hardwood floor is high enough that when I am in my bedroom,I can easily look through the venitian blinds on the windows of my bedroom and see through the windows of her camper,she has sense enough to close the curtains on the windows of her camper.I keep my venitian blinds open a little bit in the daytime because I like Sunlight inside of my house,you have a problem with Sunlight shining into my house? Yep,I am a fat old guy and I don't mess around with animals,I bet you do though.Strom Thurmond? A heck of a lot better than any Canadian you will ever see.

No, nothing at all changed. They both sit side by side, and neither one has moved.

I'm relatively sure that the R-1000 is performing like it should. I know it's popular here to "dis" the 800, but it really is a great radio. I got it for a good price not too long ago, and with all the bashing it gets I was pleasantly surprised. It's a later model (2004) so it has the improvements. With the price I bought it for, I knew I could resell it on eBay and make a few bucks, but I'm going to keep it after having played with it now.

Thanks.

First of all thank you to all that have read and or responded to my post. Good reviews of radio caused me to buy one.

R75 was delivered today. (UPS man ran into my wife and told her I bought a new radio. I'm glad I told her I got new radio before she mentioned it:-) I like it's size compared to the Drake R8B. I expect the future will even see smaller units with superior performance - I hope. Readout is easier on these old eyes than the Drake as well. Panel layout is nice. Performance is very good and many options to tame noise and lots of buttons to play with and tweak. The audio doesn't seem to be as clean as the Drake. There is for sure some distortion going on that I'll have to check out.

I've been playing with a 5btv verticle and a 160m dipole for the antennas. I've got at least a half dozen antennas on the property, so I gotta get a couple of coax switches going on.

I may have more to say later. I am newbie to high performance radio and to tell the truth mostly run Hammarlund SP600 and Racal RA17L type boatanchors. I recently had to sell the SP600 to buy the Drake. The Racal is actaully a smokin good unit with an amazing front end. So if you have some advice or tests I should try on makng comparisons to Drake then I am all ears.

bye,
Bob

The built-in speaker on the R75 is the size of a teabag. Virtually any extension speaker dramatically improves the sound. And it's great through headphones, of course (I do almost all my listening with headphones).

Guest
Re: Reality check for gas guzzlers
« Reply #5 on Today at 12:30am »

The car has been playing up a bit... slow when starting... so was going to take it to the garage today for a check up.

Took the kids to school as usual, and went shopping. Came out loaded to the gills with junk... like those totally essential flashing Xmas lights for the garden and the flashing Xmas Hats for us to wear once but without which the holiday simply wouldn't be a holiday... would it?? But is it really almost that time again - gawd?? It only seems like a year ago it was this close last time!!

While I was there I took the opportunity of buying a load of frozen gear... one of the kids is 6 next week and she wants a 'pool party' - in September mark you <brr> so we have to have it here... oh joy, oh rapture, oh god... just the thought of 25 screaming 6 year old girls needing to be entertained fills me with horror - I think maybe I'll call an 'entertainer'... anyway, I thought I'd get in early to save time next week... as you do.

So, into the car goes the shopping... into the car goes I... and that's where I stay... why? No power... well not enough to start her up anyway.

Luckily this car is leased so I call the support line... who tell me they use NRMA... who tell me there'll be a 60 - 90 minute wait. (see "oh joy" etc above and repeat...) This was 10:17.

I sit there... not that I could do much else... I read "That's Life", listen to classical FM cos the radio still just manages to work... and listen to the sound of frozen food slowly defrosting itself... and wait.

Suddenly the screen in the car lights up and tells me to switch off totally or it will explode in 7 seconds... well ok... it tells me the power will fail totally in 7 seconds... but it's much the same thing... anyway I was told to switch off or else... I didn't learn what the 'or else' would be because at that moment up came the NRMA guy... arrived at 11:30... not too bad I suppose.

Utilising the vast store of motoring knowledge I've accumulated over the years, I let him know that I thought the problem may be a dry battery... of course I've never looked under the bonnet in 3 years so I didn't even know for sure it even had a battery.. but still. You have to appear in control don't you?

So he humours me... and looks... and of course it wasn't... typical... but it was shot... he told me... though how could I check? Either way, after 3 years hard work, the battery was replaced. Symptomatic of modern life I suppose... give all you have and be cast off once you can't perform as well as you did. Eh? Cynical moi? Never... !!

Anyway... it turns out that I have to pay for it because even tho the NRMA guy was called out by the support line... apparently there is no way I can charge the battery through the NRMA and back to them... grrr!!!

And that of course is pretty much the end of the story. Ten minutes later and $140 lighter, I'm back on the road. I get home safe and sound... end of story. Except of course I now have to try to get the $140 back off the lease company... and won't that be fun!!

Chris

I have a set of plans here inside a round cardboard mailing tube.I ordered the plans from an ad in a Mother Earth magazine back in the 1970's.The plans show how to hook up a three cylinder diesel engine like the kind in small lawn mower yard tractors to an adapter to a transmission of an old british Triump car.The plans say it gets up to 125 miles per gallon.

You're right Joe... I would tell anybody to not cut corners on an antenna. I wouldn't see anything wrong with buying a $130 Sony 7600 and a $230 Wellbrook antenna. If you wanted a little more elaborate receiver you could look at used ham gear and get something pretty decent for just a little bit more. I paid $390 for an Icom 703 brand new here a few months back. I think you can also get an Icom 718 with DSP for about $500 now. I don't think it's a whole lot different than an Icom R75 plus you get a transmitter on the 718 which will require a license. If you are a serious shortwave person (and I am not) $230 for an antenna is not a lot to spend. If I had more space, I would put up some really nice wire antennas which are really cheap to make.

As far as making a loop, if I wanted to do it on the cheap then I could make one that would do pretty well. I might even be tempted just to buy the Sony 7600 and the Sony AN-1 Loop. You could do that whole shootin' match for less than $240 and still have a pretty decent (and portable) setup. That's about the cost of the Wellbrook. Yeah that sounds like a nice setup and you might even put up a wire antenna for $5 dollars more and have two different antenna setups. That sounds like the way to go for someone looking for something nice and affordable. Something even cheaper might be that Degen/Kaito radio everybody is so hot about right now. I think it's about $80 off of Ebay. Throw in 20 feet of light guage wire and a $1 alligator clip and you would have something decent and really cheap. If it has an external antenna output, add another $2 for the plug.

Man is shortwave great or what?

Sorry about rambling on...

;)

P.S. Joe... Again thanks for your earlier input and I will post more when I get the Welbrook.

Holy Moly...

I had to look up the radio I was talking about in my "Passport to World Band Radio". The radio is listed as a Degen DE1102 and/or Kaito KA1102. I found a new one listed on Ebay for $65 and that includes an AC adapter/charger, three rechargeable batteries, stereo earbuds, eand external wire antenna for $75 (includes shipping). At that price I should get one just to let my dog chew on. Passport rates the radio at three stars out of five. They give the Sony 7600 three and one eighth stars. $75 for a well rated shortwave set ready to go straight out of the box? Who said there's no such thing as a good deal anymore.

Here is the Ebay link:
http://tinyurl.com/bydz3

Here are a few reviews off of Eham:
http://tinyurl.com/ccsec

Hmm... How can I justify yet another radio? Maybe I should get one as a backup... Yeah... That's it! A backup... That will definitely justify it! ;)

I keep kicking around the idea of making a one seater car out of a small motorcycle drivetrain. Can't decide how to go about it though. I've considered a trike-car, but I think a trike wheel in the front would be too unstable. Not sure about a rear steer trike.
Also have kicked around the idea of just adding frame to one side and making a four wheeler motorcycle, but with only one side actually driving power. I'd like to make a light glass body that looked like the front of a jet plane, to cut wind resistance. If you used a 125-250 cc range engine, I bet you could get pretty a pretty decent mpg. Being I once had a yamaha 250 that probably did 80-90 mph, I think going street speeds would be a snap. Dunno how if would fare on the freeway...
Could probably do 55 I bet if stable enough.

BD,

Here we go again propagating the Liberal Democrat Party of the USA Anti-Christian and Anti-Jew Hate by trying to 'equate' Conservative {Fundamentalist} Christians and Jews with the Islam-O-Fascist Terrorists.

BD - So tell me how many Christian 'fundamentalist' have gone to Tehran, Cairo, Damascus, Riyadh, Tehran, Islamabad, and Jakarta; and flown an Airplane into a building; or exploded a Car Bomb in front of a Mosque ? ? ?
- - - Lets see your list BD !

BD - When have the Jewish 'fundamentalist' gone to London, Paris, Berlin, Chicago, Seattle, Tokyo, Hong Kong, and Moscow and kill everyone in a School, or blown-up and airplane in-flight ? ? ?
- - - Lets see your list BD !

BD - Get Real ! - Stop Targeting All Religions for the Crimes of the Islam-O-Fascist Terrorist.

BD - Stop Promoting Hate - Against Persons-of-Faith !
Especially Christians and Jews BD.

BD - Get Off 'your' Democrat Party of the USA 'moral equivalency' Mantra by trying to Link Conservative Jews and Christians with the Islam-O-Fascist Terrorists.

BD - The way that 'you' use the Code Word "Fundamentalist" when referring to Conservative Jews and Christians is a clear indicator of your Open Hatred for People-of-Faith. Liberals use the Word "Fundamentalist" as a form of Hate Speech to encourage Bigotry and Bias against Christians and Jews.

The Goal of these Left-Wing Political Activists is to Create a {Liberal} Secular Society where being a Person-of-Faith is a Crime.

There's plenty wrong with America, since you asked. (Everybody's asking.) I'm tempted to say, the only difference from Canada, is that they have a few things right. That would be unfair, of course -- I am often pleased to discover things we still get right.

But one of them would not be disaster preparation. If something happened up here, on the scale of Katrina, we wouldn't even have the resources to arrive late. We would be waiting for the Americans to come save us, the same way the government in Louisiana just waved and pointed at Washington, D.C. The theory being, that when you're in real trouble, that's where the adults live.

Thanks for your reply. The antenna is an indoor longwire mounted in the attic, connecting to the high-impedance inputs on both radios. Nothing has changed with the antenna, but as you pointed out there could be some condition that causes this particular antenna to work better with one of the radios on one particular day.

Hmm. Interesting. Well, maybe Telamon is on the right track. His theory would at least account for unpredictability of it all.

As for the Sat 800, I certainly didn't mean to "dis" it. I just don't believe that any receiver is immune to criticism. All receivers have strengths and weaknesses. It doesn't matter whether they're made by Sony, Grundig, Yaesu, JRC, Drake, Icom--or yes, even Eton.

I will now report to the nearest Sat 800 reeducation camp.

That was the point of the Berkeley. Two seater, three one cylinder motorcycle engines bolted together. Chain drive.

Henry Morgan built three wheelers for years. With a V-twin motorcycle engine out front. Single wheel in the back, steerable wheels in the front.

It was a pretty impressive racer in its day.

Morgan's three wheeler moved pretty well. Terrorized the dirt tracks.

The problem is going to be EPA. New regulations are coming into play that will require the same complex emissions systems on motorcycles that are now found on cars, and trucks. The Germans are already doing it voluntarily, trying to get out in front of the issue. Getting anywhere near decent performance with a Otto derived engine with full emissions gear, and more or less common induction is going to limit your fuel economy to less than 50 mpg. My K-100LT only sees 40 on a good day. Moto Guzzi only gets 50 with it's V-twin, and that's before the new rules go into effect.

And safety standards require greater mass for the vehicle for safety, today. That's why the VW Type One can't be made today in the US. There's not enough material in it to sustain an impact rating.

If you really want large mileage, you'll have to do two things that are currently not being done. One is change the induction system to more closely achieve a pure stoichiometric mixture in the cylinder. The other is to recover energy lost as heat that's being blown off the engine and recycle that heat energy. With a stoichiometric mixture, at maximum yield burn rates, there is no other way to increase endurance but to recover lost energies and apply them to output.

Another set of plans I have here shows how to hook up an electric motor (golf cart motor or government surplus motor) to an adapter to the transmission of a VW beetle car.I have an old Popular Science magazine here that dates back to the 1960's or 1970's that has an article about a guy who built his own vehicle that runs on compressed air.He used an old small pickup truck and some old high pressure scuba tanks he mounted in the bed of the pickup truck for his compressed air tanks.Some industrial compressed air motors have horsepower ratings of up to about 25 horsepower.Some scrap metal yards have things like that lying around for sale.Old oxycetylene tanks make good high pressure compressed air tanks too.I stay off the interstates as much as possible because I drive too slow,I prefer the back roads anyway.I like the idea of those cars that run on compressed air.Just plug them in for a while and let them charge back up.Some of those electric cars catch fire sometimes.Chrysler had some problems with some of their hybrid electric cars.One of them burned somebody's house down in Florida a few years ago.

There is a kind of a Horse liniment available at places where they sell things like that for livestock.The abbreviation name for it is DMSO.(I think) From what I have read about it before many years ago,it is a powerfull liniment,it goes right straight to the blood.Some people have used it before on themselves for sore aching muscles and joints.It is not reccomended for humans.I wonder if Mississippi Serums here in Jackson sells it.

You can use styrofoam (use styrofoam glue to glue bigger chunks of styrofoam together) and easily carve (electric carving knife,borrow your wife's electric carving knife from the kitchen) and sand whatever kind of shape you want and fiberglass over that.Gasoline will melt the styrofoam but will not affect the fiberglass.There are fiberglass cloth materials available at boat/marine supply stores,the fiberglass stretches over/around odd shapes like a sweater.

Are you using the onboard speaker versus an external one? In almost all cases, an external speaker works much better, and you can also play with a better a/b comparison by moving the speaker's terminals between two radios.

Hello guys: Because the radio get hot. I was wondering after turning it on, how long does the radio needs to take to warm up before I could use it? And how many hours per night can I use it without blowing a tube or fuse? I am trying to understand my limmits without abusing it.

Also, I have limmited space, do not want to stack other plasic case radios on top of a tube radio because it gets hot. However, could I stack a tube radio on top of another tube radio? The idea is that since both radios are mostly made out of metal and they get hot anyway, I would think the radio on top should be able to take the heat from the bottom radio.

Of course if I were to stack tube radios like that I would have a little space in between them so heat could escape. I wonder if wooden shelves can absorb heat?

Also, could I have a tube radio near my computer monitor or CPU? I don't have it near because I am trying to advoid interference by near by electronics.

I would have to find a way to add a fan to the Hammarlund 170.

jd - Yes, lawyers could still make a living, they would just have to give up cases that drag on for years in the courts. What law firm would take on a case like a class action lawsuit against a large corporation that was responsible for killing or injuring employees or neighbors? Or maybe a company that ripped off its employees retirement funds? No lawyer could afford to work on a large case that takes years to resolve under you wage cap.

The US has, arguably, the best justice system on earth. (I'm not saying it's perfect.) One thing that makes it great is that the average Joe has the ability to seek justice in the courts. But a lawyer is usually required. And justice isn't always swift - or cheap.

U.N. Whirled Government

If a global consensus is reached for the 'Alliance of Civilizations' project, work will begin for the establishment of a 'World Parliament' under U.N. leadership.

" A high-level group of 18 to 20 prominent intellectuals will prepare for the U.N. a 'road map' for action.

"This Commission of eminent intellectuals [which will include Iran's former president Khatami] that will determine ways to eliminate cultural and religious discrimination and to minimize conflicts is expected to present a report with recommendations and an 'action plan' by the end of 2006. One such recommendation may be the removal from school books of any material offensive to the cultures and religions of Islam and the West. The report prepared by this Commission will be presented to Kofi Annan, who then will bring it to the floor of the U.N. General Assembly for a vote.

"Later, the worldwide implementation of the recommendations will begin. Upon achievement of the targeted results, the U.N. will launch the second phase of the project, for the establishment of a 'World Parliament.' The 'Alliance of Civilizations' will constitute the basis for the future 'World Parliament,'

If the radio is similar to a Military Radio or most other ordinary tube type radios,you don't need to wait untill it warms up to use it.If you are going to stack tube type radios on top of tube type radios,I think it is a good idea to use some one inch by two inch strips of wood between the radios for air ventilation or you could buy or build some sort of "book cases" for the radios.If you are worried about too much heat,set an electric fan to blow on them.Tube type radios are not similar to computers,computers can't handle as much heat as tube type radios can.

Since Katrina and Rita,I have been paying much more attention to what is going on in this part of America.That Bell South woman (she is originally from Natchez,Mississippi) is next door now and she has her work clothes on,raggity bluejeans and a brown sweat shirt and she hasen't got the water turned on over there yet,so I told her I have some spare water hoses and she is going to hook up her camper to the outside water fawcet on my house.She said a girl friend of hers is going to move in with her (they are both single) and her girl friend has a rabbit.I am fixin to step over there and help her some more working on her house.

I used to keep my SX-62 turned on for nearly all the time I was at home. I like radio, and the 62 is a general coverage receiver with low VHF and FM. There's always something to hear on it. It's been on for over a couple of days several times. If the radio is in good condition, there is no limit. The power tubes, such as the rectifier and audio output tube, will last thousands of hours. The small signal tubes will last tens of thousands of hours.

That should be fine. I've always have some radios stacked and it's never been a problem. Actually, the heat probably wouldn't bother most plastic radios, either. I'll bet they'd get hotter in the direct sun.

Should be fine. Many tube radios also had wood cabinets.

Put the radio where it's convienient. If other electronics interfere with the radio, turn them off. The radio won't interfere with the other electronics.

> I would have to find a way to add a fan to the Hammarlund 170.

It's lasted a long time without a fan, and it should last yet longer without one. Most of my radios are from forty to sixty years old, and none of them have fans. I consider all of them relible enough to leave powered up indefinately. And, if one of their transformers or something should go up in smoke, I really doubt a fan would have helped.

The issues with decrease and increase in crime are probably demographic. The changes in laws are correlated but not causative. If the proportion of those likely to commit crimes rises in terms of their age group, this is the factor that increases the crime, i.e., it's the teenagers to 35 yr olds that commit most crimes. The baby boom generation aged and the crime stats declined. As the baby boomer's kids reach the ages where people do most of the crime, the stats for crime go up.

On page W6 of today's (30 Sep 05) Wall Street Journal, there is a brief review of five short wave receivers (from 50 bucks to $350).

Not very technical nor in very much depth, but then it's a rare day that there is anything at all about short wave in the Journal...

Compared to? Do you know anything about different approaches in other countries? I don't think you do. A justice system that discriminates against racial minorities does not sound "good" to me. Those with more $$ get more justice. Those from the dominant culture in any society get more.

Barring a component failure, you can use it as soon as you turn it on. It comes up pretty quickly.

It will become stable within about a half hour.

Probably not a problem. What you'll be doing, is, in effect, creating a thermal buffer for either radio, increasing stability. The Hammar will vent away much of it's heat through the louvres in the cabinet. But the chassis will remain warm. That's actually a benefit to stability.

As long as nothing gets too hot to touch, don't worry about it.

> Of course if I were to stack tube radios like that I would have a little

They will. And it's not a problem. The shelves have the chassis between the heat source and the wooden surface. That's a heat shield.
Wooden cased tube radios have a piece of silvered cardboard, or foil between the wood and the warmest tubes, as a heat shield. Same principle.

Weight on the shelves will be a bigger issue than heat.

Don't bother. Unless the transformer gets too hot to touch, you're fine. Heat in a tube radio is normal, and retained heat, within reason, enhances stability.

In a tube radio, short of some resistors, heat dissipation is accomplished by convection and component size, ie, a large surface to volume ration. Solid state devices don't have that benefit, and will fry as a junction, often smaller than a pencil point, generates more heat that it's small surface can radiate. Tubes are big, generate less heat per unit area, and have a larger surface to volume ratio. They'll get hot, but they'll stabilize.

As long as your transformer isn't too hot to touch because of a perforated cap, or a resistor out of tolerance, enjoy the warmth.

Folks - I am a senior planner at the Alameda County Planning Dept., near SFBay, CA. I am privileged to be the planner for the processing of an application for KTRB AM-860 to construct a 50 kW AM transmitter in our county at a location about 10 miles SW of Livermore, 7 miles E of Sunol, in Alameda County out in the hills. Our Board of Zoning Adustments just passed approval on it yesterday.

It will consist of a transmitter building housing a 50 kW output transmitter, and an array of four 190-foot towers in a row, with 180 radials from the base of each one to form a series of essentially 1/4-wave ground planes, aimed at 267 degrees (approximately west). The signal, being for nighttime use, also has a significant vertical aim component. In other words, with skip doing its job, this thing will be heard across the Pacific. Rear lobes may make other DXing of this station possible. The array may or may nor have counterpoises; the engineer is beginning to feel they won't be necessary. Elevation is about 770 ft MSL.

KTRB, Pappas Radio of CA, currently transmits from a site in the Central Valley near Modesto. This new site will be a nighttime transmitting facility primarily, from about 5:30 PM to 5:30 AM; the rest of the time, they would transmit in a primarily N-S pattern from a new site in southern Sonoma County, about which I have few details except their towers there will be much taller.

The engineer is strongly considering powering the site using solar power and a battery set. If so, it will be the first time in the U.S. a station of this size would be using solar power. Based on initial figures, with a backup propane generator for cloudy days in winter, it appears that it will be cost-effective.

There is more information on the internet about this move if you are interested; a Google search will get you there fast. This will be, I think, the fifth 50 kW and fourth clear channel station in the immediate SF Bay Area.

FDR - The acts of a single crazy individual against persons the view

FDR [Note] Your example is exactly why the Liberals and the Left-Wing

I Do Not 'brand' all persons of the Islamic Faith as Terrorist or crimes against innocent people are Criminals.

FDR - Another Democrat Party of the USA "LIE" designed to propagate HATE Against Christians. As a Article-of-Faith most Christians view Homo-Sexually and Prostitution as a Sin and they do Condemn the Sin { But Not the Sinner }.

These {Evil} Christians would ask the Sinner to Kneel-Down

FDR - However, you may wish to Contrast that with many members of the Islamic Faith who would take these same individuals to a Public Square and have them Stoned-to-Death.

I have not tested my Wellbrook ALA100 with the Sony 7600G.
I use it primarily (with a 7-meter loop) with the Drake R8.
Not saying that the Wellbrook would be overkill for the Sony (or other similar portable), but that a medium-high gain antenna like this would probably overload the Sony under average circumstances.

I will say: In a few weeks of use, I am convinced that the Wellbrook is the last active antenna I will need to buy - I am very happy with it - especially for MW and LW Dxing from the West Coast of ALA100 mounted a foot away from my residence: good performance

ALA100 mounted within the residence: fair performance
ALA100 mounted 10+ feet from residence: brilliant performance

Golden rule: The further away you are from general unidirectional noise sources, the better off you are.

It is quite freaky having two receivers running on the same frequency (60 meters for instance) Receiver one is plugged into Wellbrook Receiver two is plugged into passive whip antenna receiver one 'hears' no lightning static crashes receiver two picks up LOTS of lightning static crashes

That alone makes the Wellbrook worth its weight in gold.

This is good news.. Solar / Wind / Thermal .. Whatever works for that local to power a transmitter.

I have been listening to Alan Wiener on WBCQ (Alan Wiener Worldwide
(8:00 P. EST 7.415) discuss a similar project.

They have apparantly got one Windmill generator up & running, powering
the facility, with the next one set to go on line and power the transmitter.

Excess electricity is pumped back into the grid when they're not boadcasting

Using this methodology, I believe that they (WBCQ) will actually GET checks from The Maine power company servicing their area, instead of the other way around.

Imagine being in this situation, where you have the Utility company beholden to you..

- and if they do something you don't like

You shut off the power going to them !

Nice idea..

- Anyway, Will try to pick up something on 860 AM..

Though only several have done bombings, there are a lot more that support

5898. Slightly OT again; Wind Power

http://www.capewind.org/news475.htm

BOSTON, MA, September 30, 2005 - There is as much wind power potential (900,000 megawatts) off our coasts as the current capacity of all power plants in the United States combined, according to a new report entitled, "A Framework for Offshore Wind Energy Development in the United States" (Framework), sponsored by the U.S. Department of Energy, Massachusetts Technology Collaborative, and General Electric.

The Framework finds the greatest wind power potential offshore the highly-populated urban coastal areas of the northeast and it recognizes the roles of Cape Wind and the Long Island offshore wind project in creating the momentum to develop offshore wind power in the United States. The three passages below are examples of these points being made in the Framework:

"...the United States is getting started with two serious project proposals located off the coasts of Massachusetts and New York. Sustaining and building on this momentum will require leadership and the collective action of all interested parties..."

"Most of the total potential offshore wind resources exist relatively close to major urban load centers, where high energy costs prevail and where opportunities for wind development on land are limited. This is especially true in the densely populated Northeast, where nearly one-fifth of that national populations lives on less than 2% of the total land area..."

"Offshore wind energy is also an attractive option for the Northeast because slightly more than half the country's offshore wind potential is located off the New England and Mid-Atlantic coasts, where water depths generally deepen gradually with distance from shore. This attribute allows for the initial development of offshore wind in relatively shallow waters followed by a transition to deeper waters further for shore as the technology is advanced."

Jim Gordon, the President of Cape Wind, was pleased to see the Framework's recognition of the role that offshore wind can play in addressing key national priorities, "The Framework recognizes that offshore wind can meet a significant share of the energy requirements of the Northeast while helping to diversify our energy sources, protect public health and the environment, create jobs, help stabilize energy prices and make us more energy independent." Gordon continued, "Cape Wind will help to catalyze America's use of offshore wind to become a major supply of energy for the Northeast."

I have a submission in at the moment Brian for PN Stations to be separate from Newsradio in other words create a new ABC network exclusive to PN.

Newsradio would then be 24Hours on its own

And the New Network would be the Federal Parliment, Plus local transmissions of the State Parliment in each State with the Balance of unfilled time being from Radio Australia or Dig Country and Rural

I have had a warm response and in some areas only crystals need to be cut as standy by AM transmitters are not being utilised.

In addition to that new network I also want us to buy two second hand
High Power Russian transmitters for LW for Inland Outback coverage

2000 Kw on LW out where its Flat at Bourke or the Alice or in the Kimberleys where theres plenty of unused power will send a New Network on LW a Fair Way

You could cover the whole Country with two LW transmitters one in the Eastern States and one in WA. A LW TX at Broken Hill would cover Brisbane,Sydney, Melbourne and Hobart and even get to Auckland!!

We might also need another 2000Kw to cover North Queensland and the Gulf/NT
located at Mt Isa

On that new LW Network Im suggesting a new network called ABC Outback Radio

With a new separate ABC Outback Program,Sport,Dig Country.Macca and Rural and fill time from Radio Australia

If the ABC LW Services were to carry Advertising (like SBS) it may make a good venture for a separate entity, or the frequencies could be put out to tender

A Good Project for those in Broadcasting Law and with Technical Knowledge of which we have several.

Special work has to be done to cyclone proof the Transmitting aerials

For those interested in this Time Warp turned new go to http://www.longwaveradio.com/coveragemap.html

The transmitters could also be adjusted also to high power Digital
On this Link with a Cyclone Proof Cross Antenna theyre only using 500Kw. Im suggesting 2000Kw for All Australia

I have a "Grundig TR II". I purchased it about 7 years ago for use mainly on camping trips. I find that with the internal antenna it has limited reception, at least that is the way it seems to me. I do not think the radio is faulty. I suspect that if I put an external antenna on the radio it would pick up more stations. My question, has there been improvements in the reception sensitivity of small portable SW radios that would justify the purchase of a newer unit?

Thanks for the help.

Curious to know what other DXers around the world are hearing on mediumwave and shortwave?

Check out the DXpeditions page at http://www.dxing.info/dxpeditions/ - so far during 2005, a total of 24 DXpeditions from all around the world have been added on the site with detailed logs, reports and photos.
Tons of fun and informative reports from the scorching Australian sun, surviving among snakes and alligators, to freezing Arctic winters. And, surprisingly, vice versa. Winters in Australia can be bitterly cold - at least when you're DXpeditioning in a tent.

Other recently added resources include a Guide to identifying Japanese NHK AM stations, complete with audio samples, by John H. Bryant. And don't forget the latest news from the radio dial at http://www.dxing.info/news/ (ABC on 7875 indeed by the Australian

I don't remember which company it was and I think it was back in the 1960's.A company was experimenting with some vacuum tubes for radios and they claimed the tubes generated much less heat than the other kinds of regular vacuum tubes for radios.The tubes emitted a blue glow instead of the familiar red glow of regular vacuum tubes and the company also claimed their tubes lasted much longer because of much less heat too.I read about it in a Popular Science magazine back in the 1960's,,, or it might have been in the late 1950's when I read that article.

Excess electricity is pumped back into the grid when they're not boadcasting

Using this methodology, I believe that they (WBCQ) will actually GET checks from The Maine power company servicing their area, instead of the other way around. <

Good idea. This can work for anybody that has excess power provision AND a connection to the grid.

KTRB in Alameda County will have no such utility grid access; thus, they will simply use their own energy, and nobody else's.

Scientists plead for leap seconds
(Filed: 28/09/2005)

A proposal to ban leap seconds, which keep clock time synchronised with the Earth's rotation and the location of the Sun in the sky, should be opposed, astronomers said yesterday.

Leap seconds, an extra "pip", are sometimes added in December to delay Big Ben and keep atomic time in tune with the cycle of day and night determined by the Earth's rotation, which is slowing by about two milliseconds per day.

However, a radical proposal to abolish leap seconds will be discussed by the International Telecommunications Union (ITU) at a meeting in November.

The Royal Astronomical Society said yesterday that this proposal should be shelved because of problems for astronomers, satellite operators and potentially all who study phenomena related to the rising and setting of the Sun.

Some also fear that the daily cycle would drift out of sync with clock time, turning day into night.

(Well, the Moslem lunar calendar DOES turn Ramadan from summer to winter in about 5 or 6 years - it's about 11 days short of a solar year. This is why the Jewish-Babylonian and Chinese lunisolar calendars add an extra months about 7 times in 19 years.

But after how many thousand years would noon be at night on the equator? There are 86,400 seconds in a day and how frequently is there a leap second?

On the other hand, it might kill people by making navigation more complicated although with satellite navigation that might not be an issue either.)

Good morning, Brenda. This station has until next May 27, 2006, to get itself constructed and tuned to FCC specs in order to be under the wire for its FCC License to Construct. The FCC is largely unwilling these days to grant extensions on these licenses, even apparently in the face of recent evidence of obvious value of powerful stations wrt emergency communications. If this winter is not too harsh and no other roadblocks crop up (like neighbors filing lawsuits, etc), construction could be completed by next March with initial testing commencing almost immediately thereafter. I will try to keep folks apprised.

In answer to your question
YES
There has been noticeable improvement in Sensitivity of small portable SW
radions recently..

that would justify the purchase of a new SW radio..

Think the TR II is a single reduction set, both mentioned above are Double reduction, which would give you a much cleaner signal (see review ot Traveller II below)

A good proposal in theory, but:

1. Transmitter power should be limited to 500 kw max, even if one is using a retired 2 MW Russian transmitters.
2. 6 Transmission locations, and 6 frequencies may be preferred.
3. What about aeronautical LW beacons?
4. Should DRM be the standard transmission format?
5. Coverage of NZ should only be considered if NZ gives permission.
-- Role of Radio Australia's content VIC+TAZ --> NZ ? Consider this.
6. Night time power = 1/2 Day time power, as with MW: to save xmission budget & lessen far propagation.
7. Coverage of Indonesia, PNG and Fiji must also be taken into account for xmitters in QLD and Northern WA.

Wife is fine Greg and doesn't complain when I buy a radio now and then.
I'll probably keep her for another 25 years.

Michael,
R75 runs internal speaker for now. When using phones there seems to be a little distortion that I don't hear on the Drake. I'm using a pair of Rad Shack $19.95 phones with the impedance unknown. Maybe I will save up and get a better pair of phones. Maybe Tony will advise me on a pair. The phones may actually be better matched to the Drake which may be part of the distortion prob on the Icom???? Can't readily find the output impedance spec on either. Icom says 10% distortion at 2watts which means little.

And yes, the external speaker is just about useless. I'm not sure what I'm going to do there. Most of the 75m AM guys I hang with tap off their boatanchor detectors and run directly into a nice hifi audio system. That's probably what I'll do someday with the Drake and Icom.
We also run real wide signals, but don't tell anyone.

Jim,
To tell the truth I am sure that others are better qualified to answer any questions relating to performance. I am new to SWL and until I bought the Drake in the spring I was strictly a boatanchor operator.

As far as filters go I am running stock ones for now, and not too sure how they are called up in the menus. It appears the 9mc if has either a 2.4kc or a 15kc filter selectable. Seems the 455kc If has same filter options. Again, others would be more qualified to comment. SSB and AM has been fine with the filters supplied. I am looking forward to some CW work over the winter at 5wpm :-) Maybe more filters then.

I bought from HRO up in New Hampshire. I took David's advice and haggled with them and paid about $570. I just pointed out that Universal radio had them for $570. Guy went and checked and said no prob - $570. I buy from HRO cause a nice bunch over there. Also I just give em my callsign and they got my whole history. Also they are so close that UPS ground gets here overnight anyway.

For what it's worth I think the R75 is a fine unit. I will agree with others that it has some operating modes that just might give it the edge over the R8B with messy DX work. The R8B with VHF and speaker list price was very high. I think the R75 may be a good value for the money. One went on Ebay for $405 yesterday. I asked guy history and he told me he bought used over 2 years ago. So resale is still very high and he made out ok.
